I. Teacher's Manual Structure 1.

Learning Objectives: Each lesson has a theme, and after completing the lesson, students will be able to express content related to the theme in Chinese. 2. Teaching Focus and Activity Design.

(1) Warm-up activities: It is suggested that the teacher introduce the theme of this lesson as a warm-up activity.

(2) Vocabulary teaching: a.

Explain the meaning and scope of use of words with multiple meanings in this lesson. For example, "ÿ" (huàn) and "ÿ" (cái) should only be practiced in the context of this lesson, without extending to other meanings and usages, so as to avoid being too complicated and causing confusion for students.

b. As this book gradually introduces words with similar meanings, students may wonder about the differences. Teachers can provide more examples from the teacher's manual to explain the differences and prevent students from misusing them. Examples include: "ÿ/ÿ" (dÿ/zuò), "ÿ/ÿ" (mÿi/gè), "ÿ/ÿÿ" (bÿng/bÿngzhù), etc.

c. Some words have morphemes that can be used separately (Professor Deng Shouxin calls them separable words). These words are mostly verb-object structures, such as "ÿÿ" (zuò chuán, to sit on a boat) and "ÿÿÿ" (kÿo huÿ jÿ, to roast a turkey). If the meaning of the verb and noun is complete, extensible, and frequently used, this textbook will list them as two words, such as "ÿ/ÿ" (zuò/chuán, to sit on a boat) and "ÿ/ÿÿ" (kÿo/huÿ jÿ, to roast a turkey). Otherwise, they will appear as a whole word, such as "ÿÿ" (jiàn yuàn, to meet) and "ÿÿ" (bÿng bÿ, to help).

d. Distinguish between general vocabulary and phrases. A "phrase" is usually composed of several words and has a complete meaning. For example: "sounds like," "sees like." Phrases often appear because of grammatical complexity or because they haven't been taught yet; therefore, they are taught using the fixed collocations from the current lesson. This makes it easier for students to learn and for teachers to teach. Teaching and practicing phrases as a group is the best approach. The English translation of vocabulary follows the same method, translating the meaning of the entire phrase in use.

e. Explaining which words students are prone to misusing during learning, for teachers' reference. f. Suggesting the order in which teachers teach vocabulary. (3) Grammar teaching: a. Explaining the meaning and key points of each grammar rule. b. Explaining the meaning of grammar in the most easily understandable way, presenting how to use the grammar with example sentences, and then consolidating the grammar rule with exercises. c. This book contains "complements", "ba-conjunctions", "bei-conjunctions", etc., which are quite different from other languages in Chinese. The grammar is also quite difficult, and teachers need to practice extensively to achieve the learning goal.

(4) Text Teaching: a. List the important sentences of the lesson, and the teacher should focus on these sentences during teaching. b. Suggest a teaching process for the class. A "segmented teaching" approach can be adopted, introducing the vocabulary and grammar of each segment in sequence. Vocabulary should be introduced according to the teaching objectives, not necessarily in the order of the vocabulary list; some words that are listed later can be introduced first, but the number must be controlled. With this segmentation, students can have diverse practice including vocabulary, grammar, and dialogue from the text in the first segment. The first segment can then be incorporated into the second segment, using the same model to interact with students, following the spiral concept of classroom teaching.

c. Provide questions for teaching the text to enhance interaction between teachers and students in the classroom.

Machine Translated by Google

(5) Integrated Activities: a.

Reading aloud and recognizing the text: The aim is to promote fluent speech and correct pronunciation, and also to strengthen the ability to recognize Chinese characters. b.

Completing sentences from the text: The aim is to consolidate the sentences in the text, and at the same time practice writing Chinese characters. If writing Chinese characters is difficult, You can use Zhuyin Pinyin instead.

c. Communication Tasks and Activities: Practice listening and speaking through various authentic interactive activities. Some lessons also use authentic materials to enhance reading comprehension skills. (6) Supplementary Teaching of

Textbooks:

The teacher's manual includes a supplementary exercise for each lesson. This exercise is a short passage similar to the lesson's, rewritten using the new vocabulary and grammar, for students to review. Teachers can use it as listening material to train listening skills or as reading material to improve reading ability.

3. Textbook exercise answers: including grammar exercises and integrated activity answers. 4. Workbook answers: including listening exercise texts. 5. Test paper answers. 6. Supplementary website resources: including stroke order website and Chinese character animations. 7. One test paper.

II. Workbook Usage Guidelines 1. Text Comprehension: To assess students' understanding of the lesson. This can be completed by the teacher in class, or students can complete it independently.

The student returned home to complete the task.

2. Listening Practice: Part One involves dictating new vocabulary words; students listen to the recording and write down the words. Part Two involves identifying words; students listen to the recording and choose the correct word. Part Three involves listening to a short passage and answering questions. Part Four involves listening to a dialogue, presented as a Chinese language proficiency test. Teachers can play the recordings in class for some exercises, and have students practice the rest at home. Alternatively, students can practice once in class and again at home to strengthen their listening skills. The recordings provided in this textbook are available for download.

3. Vocabulary Fill-in-the-Blank: Students understand the meaning of sentences and choose the correct vocabulary to fill in the blanks. 4. Reading Comprehension: The first part trains students' sentence reading and comprehension skills by looking at pictures. The second part involves reading a short passage and answering questions. Both exercises are in the form of a Chinese language proficiency test.

5. Translation: Comprehensive practice of grammar and vocabulary. 6. Writing Chinese characters: Each lesson includes Chinese characters not yet practiced in the first two books.

Lesson 1

Welcome new students

I. Learning Objectives

Subject: Self-introduction

After completing this lesson, you will be able to use Chinese to: 1. Ask about people, things, or events. 2. Describe your life situation over a period of time. 3. Introduce yourself by name and occupation. 4. Explain your interests.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Prepare the teacher's Chinese name (on flashcards or PPT), and then introduce yourself according to the text. You can introduce yourself in sections, first introducing "surname + given name", and then decide whether to extend to "Gao" (gao, meaning happy), "Li" (li, meaning jasmine), "Ya" (ya, meaning Asia), and "Lin" (lin, meaning double trees) or "Li" (li, meaning plum).

2. Prepare the students' Chinese names (if they do not have Chinese names, use their English names for now). Following the introduction method learned in Book 1, they should say: "My surname is X, and my given name is XX. I work at XX (company name), and my job title is XXX (job title)." The purpose is to review what has been learned, and it is also a way for new students to get to know each other.

3. The focus of this lesson is on how to introduce one's Chinese name. The teacher can introduce it first, and the students can practice together when they reach the part of the text.

4. The teacher uses themselves as an example, stating their own interests, such as: "I like taking pictures." Then, the teacher naturally asks students what they like to do on weekends or weekdays, warming up for the topic of interests in the text.

II. Vocabulary Teaching

1. This lesson begins with new vocabulary related to school and learning, such as "classmate, semester, classroom, first day," etc. The teacher may have already taught orally in the first two books, and now, connecting with the first two books, the vocabulary is presented in the form of a text, bringing in vocabulary related to learning as a whole.

2. "Ah" is a common auxiliary word, frequently used in spoken language, and can convey a softer, more tactful way of expression. However, for native speakers to use it naturally, they need to master the appropriate contexts and receive language demonstrations from teachers. For adult learners' language expression needs, teachers must emphasize the appropriate situations for using "ah" and avoid using it excessively in formal settings, lest the speaking style sound like that of a child or a girl.

3. Another important vocabulary group in this lesson is "interest, photography, photos, collection." Students should practice saying "My interest is..." directly. "Interest" is easier to learn when used as a noun. Don't use "I am interested in..." in this lesson; wait until the preposition "to" is learned in Lesson 4 before changing the sentence structure. 4. The new word "continue" is an adverb in this lesson, followed by a verb, such as: "continue learning Chinese," "continue working," "continue practicing," etc. Also, while "continue learning" is commonly used, this textbook hasn't yet taught directional complements (going down, going up, etc.), and the "going down" in "continue learning" no longer refers to the specific direction of "going down," making it more abstract and difficult. Teachers should pay attention to students' understanding when supplementing the lesson.

5. The new vocabulary word "ÿ" (huàn) in this lesson can be used in many ways, besides "changing jobs," such as "changing" something you're not satisfied with after buying it, and also "changing classes, changing houses, changing clothes," etc. However, be careful because the English word "change" has a wide range of uses, and students are prone to direct analogy and overgeneralization, directly using "ÿ" for all instances of "change" in English. Conversely, where "ÿ" (gÿi) should be used in Chinese, students might...
Use "change," such as: "I change my mind." 6. "Good" in this lesson expresses degree; when used, it carries a sense of exclamation or surprise, slightly higher than "very." 7. Book Two already covered

"South/East," referring to different areas within a city. This lesson teaches "East," distinguishing it by the entire country. Students can explain their location according to the customs of different countries. Americans typically say, "I live in XX (city name) / I moved here from XX (city)." However, students can also be trained to say, "I live in the south of France / I moved here from the north of Mexico." For foreigners unfamiliar with a small city in another country, knowing the terms for the east/south/west/north of a country makes it easier to understand the location being discussed.

III. Grammar Teaching 1. Ordinal

Numbers - First (1)

"First" is added before an integer (cardinal number) to indicate order. The number is often followed by a quantifier or Noun. For example: Today is the first day of class.

(2) Sometimes it is not necessary to add "ÿ" (dì). For example, the "first floor" of a building does not need to be said as "ÿÿÿ" (dÿyìlóu). This is due to the influence of the mother tongue (English). Teachers can pay attention to possible mistakes students may make during practice.

(3) You need to practice distinguishing between "first year" and "one year".

Machine Translated by Google

2. "ÿ" indicates emphasis.

(1) In this lesson, "ÿ" expresses an affirmative tone, emphasizing the person or situation that follows. This is similar to the previously learned phrase "ÿÿÿ" (after eating).

The "ÿ" in "ÿÿÿÿ" is different.

(2) This grammar exercise should be practiced in a dialogue format. The teacher can prepare multiple pictures/photos of different kittens, label them with numbers, and ask the students, "Which picture is the white kitten?" Students are required to answer:

"Photo number 3 is the white kitten." Practice the usage of "A is B" in this way. (3) Use a map

(you can use the activity map of Lesson 7 in Book 2) to mark restaurants, parks, hospitals, parking lots, banks, coffee shops, etc., and ask students: "Where is the restaurant?" Ask students to answer: "The restaurant is next to the park." Practice the usage of "A is next to/to the left of B" in this way. (4) Practice responding when answering the phone by making a phone call, such as the exercise in Lesson 7 of Book 1. A: "Please

"Is Gao Liya home?" / "Are you Gao Liya?" B: "Yes, I am."

3. Before/After

(1) The word "before/after" has two uses. We learned "event 1 + after, event 2..." in Lesson 7 of Book 1. This lesson will compare the different uses. The explanation is a bit complicated. Please explain the differences in two stages with examples. First, explain the usage in Book 1. After you have reviewed "before/after" until you are familiar with it, then introduce the usage in this lesson.

(2) In this lesson, "ÿ" means something that happened before, such as in example (1) I used to study Chinese. Or it means that the current situation is something that did not exist before, such as in example (2) I can speak Chinese now, but I couldn't before. "ÿÿ" means that this situation has happened now, but other situations may occur in the future, such as in example (3) I can speak Chinese now, and I want to go to Taiwan to play in the future.

(3) We learned "after" in Lesson 7 of Book 1. It means that after the first event is completed, there will be a second event, as in example (4) After she comes back, please ask her to call me. "Before" means that the second event must be completed before the first event occurs, as in example (5) Before going to work, I need to take a shower (Lesson 9 of Book 2).

(4) Teachers can prepare different pictures to practice "I used to..., now..., I will...". The easiest topic to practice is "I couldn't speak Chinese before, I can speak a little Chinese now, and I will speak Chinese very well in the future." In this way, teachers can prepare different scenarios for students to practice.

4. (Quantifier) + Many

(1) "ÿ" after a numeral indicates that it is slightly more than that numeral, and is between two numerals.

Scope. The position of "ÿ" (duÿ) depends on the size of the numeral. ÿ If the numeral is 1-9, such as: Usage ÿ

ÿ numeral+ measure+ ÿ (+noun)

More than two years. (More than 2 years, less than 3 years) A little over five yuan. (Between 5 and 6 yuan)

Machine Translated by Google

ÿIf the numeral is 10 or higher, as in usage ÿ

ÿ numeral+ ÿ + measure+ noun

It costs a little over twenty yuan. (21-29 yuan)

The school has over one hundred students. (101~199) (2) The difference between "ÿ" and "ÿ". "10ÿÿ" and "10ÿÿ" have the same meaning, but:

ÿ The particle "ÿ" can be used to ask about quantities, usually numbers less than 10. For example: "How many students are there?"

But "*Are there multiple students?" is not acceptable.

ÿ "ÿ" can indicate an indefinite number, such as "only a few people", but "*only multiple people" is not acceptable. ÿ "ÿ" indicates a fraction less than an integer, such as "more than two years" which is a fraction less than the integer "2 years", less than 3 years. "ÿ" does not have this usage. "More than twenty yuan" is a fraction less than 20 yuan, and "more than twenty yuan" is also acceptable.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. Today is the first day of this semester. 2. My husband and I went on vacation to Mexico. 3. Excuse me, are you Teacher Lin? Yes, I am Teacher Lin.

4. My surname is Zhang, and my given name is Jia'an. "Jia" means family, and "an" means peace.

5. I studied Chinese for over two years. I want to continue learning Chinese.

6. My hobby is photography; I've collected many photos of birds and cats.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher, acting as Teacher Lin, narrates sentences from the text. Students then listen to the main idea of the lesson. The teacher can narrate while simultaneously displaying new vocabulary or key sentences. Alternatively, the teacher can play the textbook recording to help students understand the main idea together.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with independent dialogue and including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter at once, focusing on a few sentences in each part.

During the lesson, the teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, use other questions to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

Machine Translated by Google

4. Divide the text of this lesson into three parts:

Part One Text

Teacher Lin: Hello everyone, today is the first day of this semester.

Gao Liya: Teacher Lin, it's been a long time.

Teacher Lin: What did you do in the summer?

Gao Liya: My husband and I went on vacation to Mexico and had a great time.

Du Xiang: Our company is busiest in the summer, and I work overtime almost every week.

Goria: You've worked so hard!

(1) The key point of this lesson: On the first day of school, everyone explained what they did during the summer (when there were no classes).

What's wrong?

(2) Present the sentence: "Today is the first day of this semester." Introduce the grammatical word "ÿ" (dì, meaning "first" or "first"). Take a calendar of a week and lead the students in a pyramid-style repetition. First, repeat "The first day, the second day..."; then add "Monday is the first day, Tuesday is the second day..."; then add "Monday is the first day of the week, Tuesday is the second day of the week..." and so on, step by step. As for "Is Monday the first day of the week?", ask the teacher to practice according to local customs and concepts, perhaps "Sunday is the first day of the week".

(3) Explain the usage of "ÿ" and the points to note. This can be done simultaneously with completing the textbook grammar exercises. (4) Continue by showing other sentences from the first paragraph: "What did you do in the summer?" Let students freely share what they did. Asking questions is the best way to liven up the first day of class and allows new students to naturally join the conversation. This is also an opportunity for the teacher to review what they have learned in the past, reminding students during the conversation that they can...

Use the vocabulary and grammar you have learned to express yourself.

Part Two Texts

Zhang Jia'an: Excuse me, is this classroom 102?

Teacher Lin: Yes, please come in. What can I do for you?

Zhang Jia'an: I'm here for a Chinese class. Are you Teacher Lin?

Teacher Lin: I am Teacher Lin. Welcome, welcome. Have you studied Chinese before?

Zhang Jiaan: I've been studying for over two years. Last month I changed jobs and moved here from the east. I want to continue learning Chinese.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: how to ask for directions to a school or company. Example sentence: "Excuse me, is this...?" (2) The first question a stranger asks is usually about their purpose, so we introduce "What can I do for you?" (3) Then introduce "Are you Teacher Lin?" "Yes, I am Teacher Lin." At this point, we explain grammar point two and, following grammar teaching suggestions, practice "...is..." in a two-person interactive format. (4) If a new student joins the class, or if all students are new, the teacher can ask questions like "Have you studied Chinese before?" and "How long did you study it?" to inquire about each student's learning experience. The teacher must remember the students' learning background to provide information for future interactions.

Machine Translated by Google

(5) The teacher explained the grammar point 3 "before/after", first reviewing the usages that have been learned, and then adding the usages of this lesson.

When necessary, teachers can explain in their native language, making it easier for students to understand the differences.

Part Three Texts

| Teacher Lin: Please introduce yourself? |
| Zhang Jia'an: Hello everyone, my surname is Zhang, and my given name is Jia'an. "Jia" means family, and "an" means peace. I work at a trading company. My hobby is photography; I collect many photos of birds and cats. Gao Liya: Zhang Jia'an, nice to meet you. My name is Gao Liya, and I work at a mobile phone company. |
| Teacher Lin: Welcome, new students. Let's begin class now. |

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: self-introduction and explanation of one's interests. (2) Because this is the third volume, it is conducted in the style of a Chinese self-introduction. The sentence is displayed: "My surname is Zhang, and my given name is..." The name is Jia'an. "Jia" means family, and "an" means peace.

(3) Considering students' abilities, this lesson does not use traditional methods of introducing surnames, such as "Zhang with bow and long hair," "Lin with two trees," or "Li with wood and seed." If students have a Chinese background, the teacher can try to teach them; otherwise, the lesson will be kept simple. Regarding names, the teacher will use the simplest words from the students' Chinese names to show them how to explain the Chinese characters in their names in the future.

(4) Explain to students why they need to introduce their names in this way. There are too many homophones in Chinese, and if this method is not used, it will be difficult for the other person to understand which Chinese character is being spoken, and the Chinese character may also be written incorrectly. For example, "jia'an" may be "ÿÿ" or "ÿÿ". (5) When introducing themselves, be sure to explain your background (education, work, family, etc.) and your hobbies. One of the key points of this lesson is to let students say "My interests are...". The first two books have already taught "I like running, listening to music, cooking..." etc., and the teacher can use this to replace the phrases in this lesson.

(6) In addition to explaining interests, "likes to collect..." can also be a topic of conversation. The teacher can ask students, "What did you collect when you were little? What do you like to collect now?" The teacher can appropriately supplement any unfamiliar vocabulary to help students fully describe what they collect. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points.

(2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar.

(3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar, and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook.

(4) Use previously learned materials for extended exercises. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson and practice using key sentences from this section through information-based questions.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of questions: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand) (1) In the text, what day of school is it today? (2) What did Gao Liya do in the summer? (3) What did Du Xiang do in the summer?

Machine Translated by Google

(4) Why did Gao Liya say to Du Xiang, "You're working so hard!"? (5) Which classroom did Gao Liya and the others have class in? (6) Who was looking for classroom 102? (7) Why was Zhang Jiaan looking for classroom 102? (8) Did Zhang Jiaan study Chinese before? (9) Why did Zhang Jia'an come here to learn Chinese? (10) How does Zhang Jia'an introduce herself? (11) What are Zhang Jia'an's interests? What does she collect? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and observations) Law) (12) What did you do this summer? (13) You have been studying Chinese for two years. Will you continue to study Chinese in the future? (14) How do you introduce your Chinese name? (15) How do you introduce your English name (real name)? (16) What are your interests? When did they begin? (17) What have you collected? Can you show them to us? 6. Have students practice reciting the text in groups, and then have students take turns reciting the text individually, and correct their pronunciation.

7. Have students complete narration exercises based on the text, aiming to enable them to retell the key points of the text in a storytelling style. In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Integrated Activities 1. Reading and Recognizing the Text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly... Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after recitation, understand the content of the dialogue, and use Chinese characters or spelling. Write out the missing parts. (2) Method: a. Have students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

Machine Translated by Google

c. Write Chinese characters or pinyin, depending on the student's level.

d. If students learn quickly and at a high level, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters they practice writing.

3. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and new words learned in this lesson fluently.

(2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind students of the sentences to be used. b.

Have students ask each other questions, completing the table as they do so.

c. The teacher asks students to report the opinions of the students they interviewed to the whole class. d.

The teacher may also select two students to complete a dialogue in front of the whole class.

4. Expression Practice

(1) Objective: To train students to write short essays based on their own ideas and then report them orally. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format.

b. Have students complete the entire short passage at home according to their own circumstances, using a computer to type it out.

c. Ask students to give oral presentations in the next class. Ideally, they should be able to present without notes to train their natural expression.

5. Reading authentic materials

(1) Objective: To train students' reading ability. (2) Method:

a. Ask students to look at their name cards, and the teacher can ask what information they see.

b. Then, ask students to answer the questions in the textbook. They only need to identify keywords; they don't need to understand all the information on the business card. This trains students' ability to scan while reading.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials : Teachers

may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Hello everyone! My surname is Lin, and my given name is Guohua. "Guo" means "country" and "Hua" means "Chinese." My hobby is photography, and I also love cats, so I often take pictures of them. I'll show you some cat photos later. I used to live in the south of France, but I've moved here now. New York is a very interesting city, and I really like it. I hope I can live here someday. It's a pleasure to meet you all today.

question:

( 1. This person's surname is ( Zhang. 2. He likes taking pictures, but he doesn't like taking pictures of cats.

( 3. He now lives in the south of France. 4.

( He likes New York because it's very interesting.

ÿ Teaching Reminders:

Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs and the learning environment. If students are unwilling to learn Chinese characters, the teacher can initially focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing characters. Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols/Pinyin for listening and speaking. Reading aloud texts and example sentences can enhance students' ability to recognize Chinese characters; teachers must conduct character recognition training in the classroom every lesson. After students can recognize Chinese characters, teachers can try replacing handwritten characters with computer typing. Teachers should emphasize to students that recognizing Chinese characters is essential for correctly selecting the required characters when typing, hoping to attract students' understanding of the importance of writing/recognizing Chinese characters.

Lesson 2

The scenery by the sea is beautiful.

I. Learning Objectives

Theme: Vacation

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Describe the scenery and features of a resort destination in Chinese. 2. Describe the mode of transportation used. 3. Describe the activities you will take at the beach. 4. Describe your feelings about being on vacation.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Prepare several pictures of famous local landscapes or popular vacation spots for locals. Then ask students where they like to vacation and why. Use these questions to introduce the theme of this lesson, such as scenery, modes of transportation, and what they do on vacation.

2. This lesson will likely begin after the summer/winter holidays. The teacher can use phrases like "Your summer/winter/holiday break" to indicate the start time. "What did you do at that time?" This question leads into the theme of the lesson.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. The new words in this lesson can be divided into several groups. Those related to scenery and activities include "seaside, scenery, beauty, sunbathing, stars, diving," and words like "walking, swimming" can be reviewed. Practice these words naturally by asking questions such as "Have you ever been to the seaside? What's the scenery like at the seaside? What can you do at the seaside?" If students suggest more activities, the teacher can supplement accordingly. The teacher doesn't need to pre-plan or supplement many activities, as vocabulary related to activities is often more difficult to say and remember. Students are more likely to remember words if they are interested in a particular activity.

Machine Translated by Google

2. The quantifier "ÿ" (cì) is used frequently in this lesson and requires extensive practice. The teacher should practice it together with "ÿ" (dì) from the first lesson. The teacher should ask various questions, such as: "When was your first Chinese class? When was your first trip abroad? When was your first time swimming/diving? When was your first time eating Chinese food?..." Students should answer with "ÿÿÿÿÿ……ÿ……". Then, based on the information raised by students during warm-up, practice "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ/ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ/ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (Where did you go on vacation this time? / How was your trip abroad this time? / Who did you go on vacation with this time?) After practicing "ÿÿ……", practice "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (Where did you go on vacation last time? Where do you want to go on vacation next time?). These four combinations "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (first time, this time, last time, next time) are not easy for students and require a lot of practice. Note that you should not practice "ÿÿÿÿ……ÿÿÿÿÿÿ……" (How many times did you do this? I went three times...) at the same time, as these are different grammar points and can easily confuse students. If students are proficient, the teacher should practice them separately first before explaining the differences in usage and meaning.

3. The classifier "ÿ" can be paired with many nouns. The teacher can first give a few nouns that have been learned to explain the meaning of "ÿ" and the difference between classifiers "ÿ", "ÿ", "ÿ", "ÿ", etc. For example, how are the differences between "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ", "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ", "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ", and "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ"? This will help students understand directly.

4. The new word "ÿ" refers to all individuals within a certain range. It can be followed by a measure word or a noun, such as: Dear students, various drinks, countries, and regions. No numerals are needed.

5. Difference between "ÿ" and "ÿ": Both "ÿ" and "ÿ" refer to all individuals, but they emphasize different aspects of meaning. Sometimes they can be used interchangeably, but not every single one can be interchanged. The book Modern Chinese 800 Words (Lü Shuxiang) points out that "ÿ" emphasizes taking one or a group as an example, while "ÿ" emphasizes referring to all at once. Both can be used in phrases like "every week/each week," or "each family/each family," but the emphasis differs. However, if there are numerals, "ÿ" and "ÿ" cannot be used interchangeably, such as "Everyone…" which cannot be said as "*each one person…". 6. The new words "ÿ" and "ÿ" can both be used with means of transportation. In sentences like "take a plane/take a boat/take a car," or "take a plane/take a boat/take a car," both can often be used. However, "ÿ" is more commonly used in spoken language, while "ÿ" is more commonly used in formal written language and announcements. For example, airport and subway announcements use "Please take the car/passengers taking the plane…".

7. In this lesson, "one day" is used to refer to "one day" among many days, an unspecified (indefinite) day. When practicing, the teacher can first present a period of time (a week of work, a trip), and then ask students if anything special happened "one day" during that period. Students can describe routine things at work or during their trip, and then describe "one day" when they saw/heard/encountered something special.

8. Students often confuse "ÿ" (kàn) and "ÿÿ" (kànjiàn). Most students struggle to learn the complement structure in Chinese. Teachers should provide examples to help students understand the difference. For instance, the difference between "ÿÿÿÿ" (zÿ wài kàn tÿ) and "ÿÿÿÿ" (kànjiàn tÿ le). The latter involves a verb reaching a point and ending with a result. Use scenarios to help students distinguish the differences. For example, "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (wÿ zuó zuó kàn nà bÿn shÿ, dàn zhÿ shÿ bàn) or "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (wÿ qù guàn jiÿ, yÿbiÿn zÿ yÿbiÿn kÿngjiàn wÿ yào yÿ fu).

III. Grammar Teaching 1. V +ÿ

ÿ (1) The meaning of "ÿÿ" is quite varied. Its specific original meaning is "to stand up," and it has several other extended meanings. In this lesson, "V + ÿÿ" means to express the speaker's judgment and evaluation of a situation or thing. Verbs commonly used in this structure include: ÿ (kàn), ÿ (tÿng), ÿ (chÿ), ÿ (hÿ), ÿ (shuÿ), ÿ (xiÿ), ÿ (zuò), ÿ (chuÿn), etc.

(2) In sentences using "V + ÿÿ", the thing being evaluated must precede "V + ÿÿ", and the evaluator must not appear before "V + ÿ ÿ". For example, in "The scenery at the beach looks beautiful", the thing being evaluated is "the scenery at the beach", and the evaluation result is "it looks beautiful". (3) Students often confuse this grammar with "I think...". "I think that cake is delicious" is one's own feeling. Students may directly use "V + ÿÿ" to replace "I think..." in incorrect sentences. For example, "*I think that cake is delicious". Teachers should remind students to put the thing being evaluated first. Teachers can ask questions such as "How does that cup of coffee taste?", "How does the weather look today?", "How does that piece of clothing look?", and students can avoid making incorrect sentences by answering the questions accordingly.

2. On the one hand... on the other hand

(1) Use "while..., while..." to indicate that two actions occur simultaneously. (2) The teacher can use many action pictures for students to practice. For example: walking + chatting, taking a bath + singing, listening to music + running, etc. It is important to note that the two pictures should not contradict each other. For example: "I talk while sleeping." The teacher should explain that even if the grammatical structure is correct, it is not acceptable if the meaning is incorrect.

3. How (1)

Use "how" to ask how an event is completed. For example: "How do you get to class? How do you make a sandwich? How do you write this character?" etc. (2) Teachers can use pictures to review the vocabulary from the first two books. Use pictures of Disneyland, national parks, beaches, etc., along with pictures of airplanes, cars, bicycles, etc., and ask students "How do you get there?" Use pictures of sandwiches, hamburgers, cakes, etc., and ask "Can you make them? How do you make them?" Use a local map along with nearby restaurants, cafes, department stores, supermarkets, etc., and ask students "Which one do you like to go to? How do you get there?" Continue practicing in this way.

4. It is...

(1) This sentence structure is used to emphasize the most important information focus of a past event. This main information focus is often the subject (person), place, time, or manner. "ÿ" is placed before the focus to be emphasized, and "ÿ" is placed at the end of the sentence. In a negative sentence, "ÿ" must be placed before "ÿ".

(2) To ensure students clearly understand the focus of the emphasis, this lesson does not specify when "ÿ" can be omitted. When not omitted, "ÿ……ÿ" remains in a fixed position, reducing the likelihood of sentence errors. Teachers can decide whether to explain when "ÿ" can be omitted based on students' level. Generally, the usage in this lesson is mostly...

Machine Translated by Google

The word "ÿ" can be omitted in the clause. For example: I drove to the company. When did Gao Liya go to see the doctor?

(3) There are two main situations in which "ÿ" cannot be omitted. First, it cannot be omitted in the negative form. For example: I didn't come yesterday, I came today. Second, it cannot be omitted when the subject is "this" or "that". For example: This was delivered today, not yesterday.

(4) This grammar can be practiced using Wh-questions. For example: Who gave you these shoes? What was their time?

Are you waiting for someone to drop you off? Where are you going on vacation? How did you get there?

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. This vacation was both fun and relaxing.

2. (Diving) sounds interesting. 3. We saw fish of all colors in the sea. 4. We strolled along, looking at the stars in the sky, and felt very relaxed. 5. The beach was crowded with people.

6. How did you get there?

7. We went by plane.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher reads sentences from the text, taking on the roles of Lisa and Goliath. Students listen to the sentences first. The teacher can read aloud while displaying new vocabulary or key sentences. The teacher can also play the textbook recording to help students understand the main idea.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with independent dialogue and including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter at once, focusing on a few sentences in each part. During the lesson, the teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, use other questions to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Divide the text of this lesson into three parts.

Part One Text

Lisa: I heard you went on vacation again. How was your vacation? Gao Liya: This vacation was fun and relaxing.

Lisa: What did you do there? Gao Liya: We went swimming every day, and one day we even took a boat to learn scuba diving. We saw fish of all colors in the sea. Lisa: That sounds interesting. Is scuba diving difficult?

Golia: It's not easy, but the coach teaches very well, and I'll get the hang of it quickly.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: asking others how their holidays were. Describing what they did and saw during their holidays. The listener gives feedback on what they hear. (2) The teacher asks, "How was your holiday/summer?" and then demonstrates the learned grammar "both...and...", hoping that students can use this sentence pattern to answer questions. The teacher should introduce the new vocabulary word "relaxed". The word "relaxed" can be used after doing many things. (3) Based on the students' answers, the teacher asks, "What did you do there?" This can review the grammar from the first lesson.

Students are asked to describe what they did using phrases like "Day 1..., Day 2...".

(4) The teacher says to the students based on their description of the activity, "XX sounds very interesting." Then, based on a specific aspect of the activity, the teacher asks further questions, such as, "What else did you see? Was XX difficult? / Was XX expensive? / Was it convenient to do XX? Would you like to do XX again?"

(5) The text in this lesson does not teach "learned" because students have not yet learned the resultative complement structure. If the students are at a better level, the teacher may consider teaching it. Otherwise, practice with "I can do XX".

Part Two Texts

Lisa: Last weekend was a holiday, the beach must have been crowded, right? Gao Liya: The beach was packed. When it's winter here, everyone wants to go to the beach to sunbathe. Lisa: How was your hotel? Gao Liya: Our hotel was very close to the beach; we could see the sea right from the hotel, and the scenery was beautiful. Lisa: I imagine it must be beautiful at night too. Gao Liya: Yes! We strolled along the beach, looking at the stars, and it was very relaxing.

(1) This section focuses on describing the vacation destination, including the environment, scenery, hotels, and activities. (2) The teacher asks, "What's the scenery like at XX (the place you went on vacation)?" demonstrating the learned grammar phrase "again..." "And...", ask students to answer with words such as "pretty", "beautiful", "good-looking".

(3) The teacher asks questions in sequence: "Are there many people going there for vacation?" and "How is the hotel you stayed at?" The discussion can cover whether the room is big or small, expensive or not, convenient or not, and whether you can see the sea. It can also be extended to "When you travel, what kind of hotel do you like to stay at?" Students can express their opinions from two perspectives: "The room should be nice and comfortable, and it doesn't matter if it's a little expensive" and "I just want to sleep, so a cheaper one is fine."

| Lisa: How did you get there? |
| Gao Liya: We flew there, and then rented a car to go to the hotel when we got there. It was very convenient. |
| Lisa: I've decided to go there for my next vacation. |

(1) The focus of this section is on grammar points 3 and 4. The teacher uses the question "How did you get there?" to guide the discussion of grammar and vocabulary.

The words "sit, ride, rent". (2) Then extend to "How do you book hotels?" and "How do you rent cars?" Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display the sentences, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar. (3) Have students practice the vocabulary and grammar, and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook. (4) Use previously learned materials for extended exercises. (5) Integrate the content of this section and practice using key sentences from this part through information-based questions.

5. After reading the whole text again, ask questions according to the text ÿ Sample questions: (Teaching questions, ask questions according to the content of the text, check whether the students understand) (1) Where is Gaulia going on vacation? Who is Gaulia on vacation with? (Review the content of Lesson 1) (2) How was Gaulia this holiday? (3) What did Gaulia do at the seaside? (4)

Does Gauria find it difficult to learn to dive? (5)

Who taught Gaulia to dive? (6) What does

Lisa think of Gauria's vacation? (7) Are there many people at the seaside that Gaulia goes to? (8) Why are people everywhere by the sea? (9) Is the inn where Gaulia is staying far from the sea? (10) What can be seen from the room where Gauria lives? (11) What does Gauria do at night? How is your mood? (12) What did Gauria take to vacation by the sea? (13) Does Lisa want to go to that seaside vacation? ÿ The following ask students to answer according to their situation: (Information questions to allow students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (14)

Where do you want to go on vacation? Why? (15)

When you are on vacation/when you have a vacation, do you always go on vacation? Why? (16) Do you prefer to drive yourself to vacation? Why? (17) Do you prefer to vacation in crowded places or in less crowded places? Why? (18) Do you think you must go abroad for vacation? Why?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, and then have them read the text aloud individually in turn, while correcting their pronunciation.

7. Have students complete narration exercises based on the text, aiming to enable them to retell the key points of the text in a storytelling style.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method: a. Have students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Writing Chinese characters or pinyin can be arranged according to the students' level.

d. If students learn quickly and at a high level, the teacher can prepare additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters to be written.

3. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and new words learned in this lesson fluently.

(2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind students of the sentences to be used. b. Have students ask each other questions, completing the table as they do so.

c. The teacher asked the students to report to the class what the students he had interviewed had said.

d. The teacher can also select two students to have a conversation in front of the whole class.

4. Expression Practice

(1) Objective: To train students to write short essays based on their own ideas and then report them orally. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format.

b. Let students choose where they want to go on vacation.

c. Students then complete the content according to the structure. d. Students take turns sharing their thoughts with the class.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

I've been working for five years, and my job is very demanding. My company gives me a month's vacation every year, which I use to go on holiday. When I come back, I feel very relaxed. This year, I really want to go on vacation to southern Europe; I've heard the beaches there are beautiful. Because I love the sea, I want to dive down and see all kinds of colorful fish, and I also want to swim in the sea like a fish. At night, you can see the stars in the sky from the beach, and I think the stars look like beautiful eyes.

question:

( ) 1. Because my job is easy, I can go on vacation. ( ) 2. I have worked for five years and only have one month of vacation. ( ) 3. Because there are many colors of fish, I like to go to the sea to see them. ( ) 4. You can see many stars at the seaside, and those stars look very beautiful.

ÿ Teaching Reminders:

Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs and the learning environment. If students are still unwilling to learn Chinese characters or do not write them well after studying the first and second books, the teacher can focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing Chinese characters first.

Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols/Pinyin to practice listening and speaking first, while simultaneously recognizing Chinese characters, hoping to absorb...

To inspire students' interest in writing Chinese characters.

Lesson 3

Thanksgiving Day

I. Learning Objectives

Topic: Holidays

After learning this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Ask others for their thoughts. 2. Explain your holiday plans and arrangements. 3. Describe how you feel about a holiday. 4. Name Thanksgiving foods.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Prepare pictures of Thanksgiving food, then guide students to understand that the theme is related to Thanksgiving. 2. Ask questions based on dates, such as "What holidays are there in November?" and "What day is the fourth Thursday of November?" 3. In areas without Thanksgiving, please use Christmas or another important local holiday to introduce the holiday theme.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. The vocabulary in this lesson includes Thanksgiving foods such as "roast turkey, pumpkin pie, and mashed potatoes," as well as new words not yet appearing in this textbook, such as "salad, bread, and dessert." These words are presented with pictures, and students can simply read and recognize them. Teachers can supplement the lesson with other important local representative foods and drinks that are not mentioned in the book.

2. In this lesson, "ÿ" is a verb and can be used in phrases like "ÿÿÿ (guòshÿngrì, celebrate birthday), ÿThanksgiving," and "ÿÿÿ/ÿÿ (guòxÿnchÿn/Chÿnchÿn)." This is different from the "ÿ" in Lesson 10 of Book 2, "ÿÿÿÿ (qùguò yànxiÿng)." Teachers can use questions like "How do you celebrate your birthday? Thanksgiving? Christmas? New Year?" to provide repeated practice.

Machine Translated by Google

3. The new words "hurry up," "too late," "afraid," "late," "early (review), a little" can be practiced together. The teacher can guide students to say "I have to hurry out/hurry to buy a present" by asking questions like, "It's almost time for class/work, and you're afraid you won't have enough time," or "Christmas is coming soon, and you're afraid you won't have enough time to buy a present." Then, practice in various scenarios, such as, "I have an important event at the company tomorrow, should I leave at the same time as usual?" or "You need to catch a plane, and you're afraid you'll be late, will you leave a little earlier?" 4. This lesson in the book has not yet taught the grammar points "too late" and "too late," as the grammatical structure is more difficult. The teacher can decide whether to add "too late" based on the students' level; otherwise, practice with the entire meaning of "too late."

5. The word "ÿÿ" (bÿngbÿng) is a separable verb, but since this lesson will focus on teaching and practicing the whole verb first, there's no need to mention phrases like "You help me/I help him/her." Therefore, the teacher should ask questions like, "I..., can you help me?/If you..., do you need my help?" to avoid students saying "I help you."

6. Both "ÿ" and the previously learned "ÿÿ" are conjunctions indicating a choice, but they are different. "ÿÿ" is mostly used in interrogative sentences, such as: Do you prefer pumpkin pie or chocolate cake? While "ÿ" is mostly used in declarative sentences, such as: Please ask him to bring bread or fruit.

7. The word "lively" has contextual limitations, and teachers need to guide students to use it correctly. "Lively" can be used to describe "environments and atmospheres with many people and commercial activities," such as festivals, birthdays, sports competitions, and community events. It cannot be used to describe people, such as: "Mr. Lin is very lively."

8. The "suggestion" in this lesson is a noun; the teacher can supplement with its usage as a verb. Many Chinese words are "multi-class words" (words that can function as both nouns and verbs). Both verbs and nouns are acceptable; the teacher will explain this through exercises.

III. Grammar Teaching 1.

From… to…

(1) This sentence pattern indicates the situation from one time to another, within that time period. In Lesson 6 of Book 2, we learned "from place A to place B,...", which indicates the situation between two places.

(2) The teacher prepares two time slots and then practices by asking questions. For example: "What time do we have class?", "What are your daily work hours?", "When do you go on vacation?", etc. (3) If students have not yet learned the grammar "from...V to... (from 7 o'clock to 8 o'clock)," the teacher gives examples. Try to avoid this as much as possible; simply practice by substituting two time words.

2. A little earlier/later + V

(1) "Morning/evening" is placed before "one o'clock" to form an adverbial phrase, which is used to modify the following action. This indicates whether you do the action earlier or later.

(2) Although the structure “early/late” can be replaced with “faster + V / slower + V”, this time concept is not easy to use correctly. To avoid complexity, this lesson only practices “earlier/later”.

(3) Students are prone to errors such as “*I come to school a little early / *I want to go a little late”.

Machine Translated by Google

3. Vs + a little

(1) When a state verb is used as a modifier, adding a "dot" after it indicates a difference from the general understanding.

The amount of knowledge will be more or less in the future.

(2) This usage often appears after comparing different situations, where the speaker gives an evaluation or their own opinion. Teachers can introduce this grammar by first providing different scenarios for students to choose from, and then asking for the reasons. For example, the teacher asks: "Were you very busy this month, and were you also very busy last month?" If the student says "Both were very busy," the teacher can then ask, "Which month was busier?" This will guide the student to choose "This month was a little busier" or "This month was a little easier" to respond.

(3) You can review the grammar "A is the same as B?" to present a scenario. For example, "Is learning to scuba dive as difficult as learning to swim?" or "Is roasting a turkey as easy as making a pumpkin pie?". Let students choose one of these to express "XX is easier / XX is more difficult".

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. I'm thinking about how to spend Thanksgiving.

2. There are only ten days left until Thanksgiving, so make your decision quickly!

3. It's more lively to celebrate the festival together with everyone.

4. I need to cook a lot of dishes, and I'm worried I won't have enough time. 5. Could you come earlier to help? 6. Please bring something to eat; it will make things easier. 7. Your suggestion is great.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher speaks sentences from the text, taking on the roles of both Gao Liya and Lisa. Students listen to the sentences first. The teacher may... While speaking, you can demonstrate new words or key sentences.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into two parts. Each part should contain a complete dialogue and include important vocabulary and grammar points. This is to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on the content of each part initially. During the lesson, the teacher should first present the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. Through this dialogue, students will understand the meaning and be able to pronounce the sentences. Then, use other questions to encourage students to practice these key sentences repeatedly.

4. Divide the text of this lesson into two parts.

Part One Text

Lisa: Hi! Goria, what are you thinking about?

Gao Liya: Lisa, I'm thinking about how to spend Thanksgiving.

Lisa: There are only ten days until Thanksgiving, you'd better decide quickly! Gao Liya: I'd like to invite my foreign friends who can't go home to my house; it would be more lively if we all celebrated the holiday together.

Lisa: Great! Can I join? I've been so busy with work lately that I haven't had time to go home for the holidays.

Goria: You're very welcome!

(1) The teaching focus of this section is the grammatical structure "from...to..." which expresses a period of time. (2) Show the sentence: "There are only ten days from now until Thanksgiving."

The teacher introduces the grammar point "from time to time, ..." and then introduces the grammar point with the simplest example, "From Monday to Friday, we have to go to work." and "We work from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m." (3) The teacher explains the difference between the "grammar in this lesson" and the previously learned "from place to place" usage and points to note. (4) The teacher repeatedly practices the insertion of different time structures. Then the teacher asks students to do the exercises in the textbook grammar. (5) The teacher asks "Who would you invite to your house for XX holiday?" and then "Why?" to lead students to the conclusion that "it is more lively to celebrate the holiday together." (6) The teacher asks "If you can't go home for XX holiday, how do you feel? What would you do?" to lead students to different activities.

Practice another part of the text, following the same approach as the dialogue exercises in Part 1, focusing on grammar and vocabulary practice.

Part Two Texts

Gao Liya: I have to cook a lot of dishes, and I'm worried I won't have enough time. Could you come earlier to help?

Lisa: No problem. You could ask each friend to bring some food; that would make things easier. Gao Liya: That's a great suggestion. I'll prepare a roast turkey, mashed potatoes, and salad. I'll ask my friends to bring bread, desserts, drinks, and fruit.

Lisa: I brought pumpkin pie; autumn pumpkins are delicious.

Gao Liya: I heard that Du Xiang is very good at making bread, so I asked him to bring some bread.

Lisa: Ask Zhang Jia'an again, it seems she doesn't plan to go back either.

Gao Liya: If she's coming, please ask her to bring drinks or fruit.

Lisa: This year's Thanksgiving is going to be a lot of fun! Gao Liya: I'm also happy to spend the holiday with my friends.

(1) The focus of this section is on grammar points 2 and 3. The teacher uses the question "Gorilla is preparing a lot of dishes? What is she afraid of?" to introduce the vocabulary "too late". Then, the teacher asks, "Who did she ask for help?" and "When did she ask Lisa to come to her house?" Following the suggestions of the vocabulary teaching department, the teacher repeatedly practices the vocabulary "afraid", "too late", and "help".

(2) The teacher uses the questions "What advice did Lisa give to Gorilla?" and "What will happen to Gorilla in this situation?" to introduce the vocabulary "ask". "Everyone bring some food; it will make things easier for Goria."

Machine Translated by Google

(3) Ask everyone: "What do you prepare when you invite friends to celebrate the holidays?", "Do you ask everyone to bring something to eat?", "Do you often do this?" Discuss this topic. (4) The focus of this part of the text is "What food do you make? What food/drinks do you bring to your friends' houses?" The previous topic is about being a host, and the teacher can continue the discussion by asking, "What would you do if you were a guest?" Teaching process for each part of the text: (1) Show the sentences and mark the key vocabulary and grammar. (2) Briefly explain the vocabulary and grammar points to note.

(3) Have students practice new words and grammar, and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook.

(4) Use the materials you have already learned to do extended exercises. (5) Integrate the content of this section and practice using the key sentences in this section by asking questions.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) What is Gao Liya thinking? (2) Why did Lisa say, "You should decide quickly"? (3) Who does Gao Liya want to invite to her house for Thanksgiving? Why? (4) Will Lisa go to Gao Liya's house for Thanksgiving? Why? (5) Why did Gao Liya ask Lisa to come to her house earlier? (6) What advice does Lisa give Gao Liya? (7) What dishes will Gao Liya prepare?

(8) What did Lisa bring? (9) What did Gao Liya ask Du Xiang to bring? Why? (10) Will Zhang Jiaan go to Gao Liya's house to celebrate the holiday together? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (11) How do you spend Thanksgiving (Christmas)? (12) Do you invite friends to celebrate the holiday together? Which friends do you invite? (13) Do you like to prepare a lot of dishes to invite friends to celebrate the holiday together? (14) Do you think it is more lively and happier to celebrate the holiday with friends? Why? (15) Do you think celebrating the holiday is a troublesome thing? (16) What is your favorite holiday? Why? 6. Have students practice reading the text in groups, and then have students read the text individually in turn, and correct their pronunciation.

7. Have students complete narration exercises based on the text, aiming to enable them to retell the key points of the text in a storytelling style. In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

(2) Method: a.

Ask students to look at the information on the invitation card. b. Ask students to answer questions about why Gao Liya invited her friends and when.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

November is here, and Thanksgiving is just around the corner. Zhang Jia'an really wants to go home and spend Thanksgiving with her family, but from September until the holiday, it's her busiest time at work. She's often working overtime and sometimes even misses her Chinese class. Gao Liya invited Zhang Jia'an and Du Xiang to her house for the holiday, saying it would be more lively with everyone together. Jia'an wants to bring her homemade pumpkin pie to share with everyone; she's sure they'll have a wonderful Thanksgiving this year.

question:

( ) 1. Thanksgiving is coming soon, and Zhang Jia'an is going home for the holiday. ( ) 2. Zhang Jia'an's work is very busy every month. ( ) 3.

Because of overtime work, Zhang Jia'an often misses his Chinese class. ( ) 4. Zhang Jia'an is very good at making pumpkin pie, and he makes it very delicious.

ÿ Teaching Tips:

Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs or the learning environment. If students are unwilling to learn Chinese characters or do not write them well, teachers can first focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing Chinese characters. Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols/Pinyin to practice listening and speaking first, while simultaneously learning Chinese characters, hoping to attract students' interest in writing Chinese characters.

Chinese calendar

In Taiwan and other Chinese-speaking regions, the calendar used differs from that used in other countries; it is called "agricultural calendar" by the Chinese.

The lunar calendar, or "lunar calendar," has been in use for over two thousand years. Ancient Chinese people, based on the lunar calendar, added elements related to the sun.

Observations of the calendar's operation led to the creation of the lunar calendar. This design, combining the concepts of the lunar and solar calendars, helps people understand the calendar more accurately.

The patterns of climate change are understood, and agricultural activities and daily life can be arranged according to the instructions in the lunar calendar.

Although in modern society, Chinese people, like people in other regions, use the Gregorian calendar to plan events and celebrate days.

However, in traditional folk customs, people still follow the dates of the lunar calendar. For example, festivals like the Spring Festival (Chinese New Year) are observed according to the lunar calendar.

The Lantern Festival is on the 1st day of the first lunar month, the Lantern Festival is on the 15th day of the first lunar month, the Dragon Boat Festival is on the 5th day of the fifth lunar month, and the Mid-Autumn Festival is on the 1st day of the first lunar month.

It could be the 15th day of the eighth lunar month, etc. Additionally, the birthdays of elders and dates for offering sacrifices to deities or ancestors are often determined by the lunar calendar.

Therefore, the lunar calendar is still very important to Chinese people in modern society, even if it is not frequently used.

Lesson 4

The company sent me here to work.

I. Learning Objectives

Subject: Work

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Describe your current work situation. 2. Describe the unique features of your company. 3. Express your thoughts on the future.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. In Lesson 10 of Book 2, the protagonist, Wang Mingwen, has graduated from graduate school and is returning to Taiwan to work. This lesson was designed to bring him back into the Book 3 curriculum. The scenario involves Wang Mingwen being sent by his company in Taiwan to work at the American branch. 2. The lesson uses the scenario illustration from Lesson 10 of Book 2 to review "Wang Mingwen returned to Taiwan immediately after graduation" and "Wang Mingwen worked in Taiwan." This sets the background for the theme of this lesson. 3. The lesson uses the phrase "Wang Mingwen works at a technology company" and the reverse arrow in the scenario illustration to guide the reader to "Wang Mingwen goes to work in the United States." The teacher then guides the reader to the point that "the company sends Wang Mingwen to work in the United States," emphasizing that "sent" implies a hierarchical relationship. The nature of the master to the servant.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. The verb "ÿ" (pài) has a superior-to-inferior or subject-to-subject nature, and is mostly used in work-related contexts. When practicing, provide appropriate contexts to avoid confusion with "ÿ" (sòng). For example: The boss sent me to do…; the teacher sent him to get the book. 2. This lesson contains many words related to companies and work, which can be practiced together. For example, "technology company," "famous," "know," "understand," "situation," "product." The teacher can use a famous technology company (TSMC, Apple, etc.) as an example.

Machine Translated by Google

(Samsung, IBM, Intel) ask questions. "Is XX a famous company? Do you know this company? Do you understand this company's situation? What is this company's most famous product?" The teacher then uses "quite famous" and "quite knowledgeable" to introduce the new word "quite." This illustrates the degree difference between "very," "quite," and "extremely." Modern Chinese 800 Words (Lü Shuxiang) explains that "'quite' placed before a verb indicates a high degree, but slightly lower than 'very.'" 3. Distinguish between "knowing" and "understanding." There is a degree difference between

"knowing a person/company" and "understanding a person/company." "Knowing" does not mean "understanding."

4. The teacher then uses other companies and things to practice the vocabulary of "technology company," "famous," "know," "understand," "situation," and "product." For example, catering company, celebrity, etc. 5. Next, the teacher connects words like "development," "future," and "cooperation." For example, "How do you think XX company is developing now? Will it continue to develop well in the future? Does your company have the opportunity to cooperate with them?" Then guide the discussion to students' companies. "How do you think your company is developing now? What will it be like in the future? Which company does your company cooperate with? What products does your company have?" The teacher must note that "development" is a verb and should avoid students using it as a stative verb, such as "*XX is developing very well." The correct usage is "XX is developing very quickly," or "XX is developing very well." 6. "Thinking" indicates making a judgment about something, but the judgment is often inconsistent with the facts. For example: I thought he could cook, but actually he can't.

7. The usage of the new vocabulary word "ÿ" (bÿngbÿ, to help) in this lesson is slightly different from "ÿ" (bÿngbÿ, to help) in Lesson 3. "ÿ" is a verb, which can be followed by "ÿ" (le), "ÿ" (zhe), or "ÿ" (guo), or other objects, such as: I helped him. "ÿ" is a separable verb, which can have other elements inserted in the middle, such as: Gao Liya asked Lisa for help, and Lisa helped a lot. 8. The usage of "ÿ" (gÿng, just) in this lesson indicates that an event happened recently, but does not specify the time frame. The teacher will provide examples. 9. "ÿÿ" (jiàn, to meet) is a separable verb and cannot be followed by an object. The teacher will remind students that when using it, they must say "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (wÿ gÿn (rén) / "Meet (someone)". A common mistake students make is "*I met him".

10. The teacher first gives some common uses of "aspect" (ÿÿ), such as: trade, computers, technology, cooking, etc. Then, they practice with "experience" (ÿÿ). The teacher asks, "Do you have work experience in trade/computers/technology?" Then, they extend the question, "What aspect of that company do you think has a problem?" 11. The context for using "of course" (ÿÿ) is important. Using it with elders or superiors might sound impolite. For example: Boss: "Did you call Mr. Wang?" Employee: "Of course I did." This sounds like the boss is asking an unnecessary question.

III. Grammar Teaching 1.ÿ (1)

The

adverb “ÿ” indicates that an action is ongoing or that a situation still exists. It is often placed before a verb or verb phrase, such as: I still want to drink coffee. “ÿ” or “ÿ” is used to negate the situation, such as: I still don’t know his name. It has a different meaning from “ÿ (also, in addition)” in Lesson 6 of Book 1.

Machine Translated by Google

(2) The word "ÿ" has multiple meanings. In this lesson, it indicates a calm tone without any emphasis or variation. If the tone is raised, it means to emphasize or stress the matter. For example: He is a few years older than you. If the tone is more subdued, it means to downplay or lighten the matter. For example: This painting is not bad.

(3) When practicing, teachers should focus on the usage in this lesson and not bring out all the different usages.

The preposition "ÿ" indicates the object or relation of an action. (2) The practice of

"ÿ" in this lesson focuses on two forms. One is "A said to B...", where the teacher uses two characters to practice what A said to B. For example: The teacher told me how to write this character, and Dad told Mom that the beef noodles were delicious today. The second is to practice in conjunction with the fourth grammar point. Use "A to B + (very) Vs", followed by a stative verb. For example: He was very polite to me, I am interested in taking pictures, and this experience is helpful to me. Words that can be used in this lesson for practice include helpful, very knowledgeable, interested, interesting, etc.

3. V + to

(1) The preposition “ÿ” is placed after the verb to indicate where the end point of the action is. Sometimes it is the end point in space, and sometimes it is the end point in time.

(2) The teacher prepares a number of verbs that have been learned and then divides them into two parts to practice more specific verbs and monosyllabic verbs first. Such as: time (six to eight / Monday to Friday), location (run here to there / the south moved to the east), then practice more abstract, such as: the first lesson learned the fourth lesson, morning sell to afternoon. (3) If the verb is a verb-object structure (VO), be aware that only "V+ to" is used, if the entire verb-object structure needs to be repeated. For example: "I went to work from 9am to 6pm, I moved to the south". Can't say ``*I moved to the south.''

4. S has + N for ...

(1) This sentence pattern introduces the subject with "ÿ" (duì), indicating the subject's attitude or thoughts toward a thing or topic. (2) "ÿ+ÿÿÿ

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. Do you remember me?

2. The company sent me to work at its branch office in the United States.

3. I am quite familiar with the situation in the United States, so the company sent me here.

4. Taiwan has made great strides in computer technology.

5. Our company collaborates with companies in many countries, and our products are sold worldwide.

6. I thought you would continue working in Taiwan. 7.

My work experience in the US will be helpful for my future. 8. Let's schedule a time to meet again when you're free.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher reads sentences from the text, taking on the roles of Wang Mingwen and Gao Liya respectively. Students listen to the sentences first. (Teacher...)

You can speak while demonstrating new words or key sentences.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with independent dialogue and including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter at once, focusing on a few sentences in each part. During the lesson, the teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, use other questions to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. This lesson is divided into three parts.

|---|
| Wang Mingwen: Hello! Are you Gao Liya? |
| Goria: That's me. Who are you? |
| Wang Mingwen: I am Wang Mingwen, do you remember me? |
| Gao Liya: Wow! Wang Mingwen, of course I remember. |

(1) Key points for teaching this section: still remember, of course remember, pai. (2) Review: "(I) am". The teacher pretends to call a student, "Are you...?"

Student: "That's me."

(3) Continuing from the previous topic, practice with a question-and-answer format: "Do you remember me?" and "Of course I remember." Then use students' interests to practice: "You used to like playing ball, do you still like it now?" and "I know you really like eating steamed buns, do you still like them now?" Let students naturally answer, "Of course I still like them."

Machine Translated by Google

"Yes..." Then ask the student, "You loved playing computer games when you were in elementary school, do you still like them now?" "You didn't like eating vegetables when you were little, do you still don't like them now?"

(4) The teacher asked the students to do the exercises on the grammar word "ÿ" in the textbook.

Part Two Texts

Gao Liya: (Wow! Wang Mingwen, of course I remember.) Are you here to travel to the United States?

Wang Mingwen: No, my company sent me to work at their branch in the United States.

Gao Liya: What company do you work for now?

Wang Mingwen: I work for a technology company. Because I am familiar with the situation in the United States, the company sent me here.

Goria: That's great! How long are you going to be here?

Wang Mingwen: The company hopes I will stay here for at least a year.

Gao Liya: I know that Taiwan is quite advanced in computer technology, and many companies there are very famous. Wang Mingwen: Yes!

Our company collaborates with companies in many countries, and our products are sold all over the world.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is on the company's situation. "Working in a technology company, the company is doing very well, the company is very famous, its products are sold all over the world, and Wang Mingwen has a good understanding of the situation in the United States."

(2) Use a series of questions and answers to present the content, such as: "Did Wang Mingwen come to the United States for a trip? Why did his company send him to work in the United States? How long will he stay in the United States? How is the computer technology in Taiwan? How is Wang Mingwen's company doing?" The teacher then uses these questions to ask students to describe their companies. Or, the teacher can use several well-known companies as examples to express their opinions.

Part Three Texts

Gao Liya: You went back to Taiwan right after graduation. I thought you would work in Taiwan forever.

Wang Mingwen: Although things are good in Taiwan, my work experience in the United States will be helpful for my future.

Gao Liya: You just arrived, are you busy with work?

Wang Mingwen: The first month was very busy, but this month is a bit easier.

Goria: Well then, let's schedule a time to meet again when you're free.

(1) The teacher used questions to discuss Gao Liya's views on Wang Mingwen coming to the United States. "Where did Gao Liya think Wang Mingwen would work before? Does Wang Mingwen like working in the United States?" Continuing this topic, the teacher asked students if they wanted to change jobs, what the benefits of changing jobs would be, whether they wanted to work abroad, and whether the experience of working abroad would be beneficial to them.

(2) The teacher used the scenario "What would you do if a friend you haven't seen in a long time came to visit you? Would you invite your friend to go out?" "Where?" This question prompts students to share where they like to meet their friends. The teaching process for each part of the text is as follows: (1) Display sentences, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar. (3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar, and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook.

Machine Translated by Google

(4) Use the materials you have already learned to do extended exercises. (5) Integrate the content of this section and practice using the key sentences in this section by asking questions.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) Who called Gao Liya? (2) Was Gao Liya

happy to receive the call? (3) Does Gao Liya still remember

Wang Mingwen? (4) Why did Wang Mingwen come to the United States? (5) What company does Wang

Mingwen work for in Taiwan? (6) How long will Wang Mingwen stay in the United States? (7) Does Wang Mingwen's company have many branches? Where are they located?

(8) Does Wang Mingwen's company have many products? (9)

Does Gao Liya know about the computer technology situation in Taiwan? (10)

What are the benefits for Wang Mingwen to work in the United States? (11) Has

Wang Mingwen been very busy since arriving in the United States? (12) Will Gao Liya arrange to meet with Wang Mingwen? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions)

(13) Is your company big? Is it famous?

(14) Does your company have branch offices? (15)

How is your company doing? (16) What kind of company is your company? What products does it offer? (17) Do you think your company will continue to do well in the future?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Integrated Activities 1. Reading and

Recognizing the Text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

After graduating, Wang Mingwen worked in Taiwan for a year. His company wanted to expand to the United States, and because Wang Mingwen was familiar with the US, the company sent him there. He worked for a large, well-known technology company with a wide range of products. Although his work in the US was busy and tiring, the experience would be beneficial for his future.

question:

( ) 1. Wang Mingwen worked in the United States for a year after graduation.

( ) 2. Wang Mingwen's company has a branch in the United States.

( ) 3. Wang Mingwen's company is an internet company.

( ) 4. Because American companies are very famous, Wang Mingwen went to work in the United States.

ÿ Teaching Tips:

Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs or the learning environment. If students are unwilling to learn Chinese characters or do not write them well, teachers can first focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing Chinese characters. Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols/Pinyin to practice listening and speaking first, while simultaneously learning Chinese characters, hoping to attract students' interest in writing Chinese characters.

Lesson 5

Oolong tea is very fragrant

I. Learning Objectives

Topic: Drinking Tea.

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Understand the tea-drinking habits of Chinese people. 2. Explain basic tea knowledge. 3. Describe the taste of tea.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Introduce Taiwanese tea using pictures from Unit 2 of the Culture section, including tea gardens, tea houses, tea bags, teacups, and tea soup. Guide students to learn about Taiwanese tea and how it is sold in Taiwan.

2. Show students pictures of various beverages and ask them what drinks they like, such as tea, coffee, milk tea, juice, water, etc. While we're at it, let's review the names of the beverages we've already learned.

3. The teacher introduced the new vocabulary and key points of the lesson by asking, "Have you ever drunk Taiwanese tea? What did you think of the taste?"

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. The new words in this lesson related to taste are "taste," "sweet," "bitter," "strong," and "light." These words can be practiced by giving examples of various foods. For example, "Have you ever drunk coffee/apple juice?", "How does coffee/apple juice taste?", or "What does coffee/apple juice taste like?" This leads to the understanding that "it tastes sweet" and "it tastes rather bitter," reviewing the grammar "V-like." Then, by asking "Do you prefer strong coffee or weak coffee?", this leads to the understanding that "stronger" and "lighter" are related to "taste," reviewing the grammar "V-like." Finally, all the vocabulary can be practiced using other foods.

Machine Translated by Google

2. Practice pairing the new word "fragrant" with "smells". First, practice "Does this cup of coffee smell good? / Is it fragrant?" Students' answers are only "fragrant" or "not fragrant". If students want to know the opposite of "fragrant", "stinky", the teacher can supplement as needed, but "not fragrant" does not necessarily mean "stinky". The teacher can then practice with other foods that have a more obvious smell.

3. The new words "ÿÿ" and "ÿÿ" are used similarly. The Chinese character for "ÿÿ" is simpler and easier to pronounce, making it suitable for adult students. Practice should be done using the example "A is different from B".

4. The word "ÿ" (pào) can be used for many foods, including tea, coffee, and instant noodles. It differs from "ÿÿÿ" (zhÿfÿkÿ) or "ÿ" (lÿlÿ).

"Brewing coffee, etc." The teacher will explain the difference between "brewing" and "boiling" depending on the situation.

5. In this lesson, "excuse me" is used politely in communication. The teacher designs scenarios, such as asking a shop assistant to show you a product, asking a colleague to help you look at some documents, or asking a friend to buy you coffee, and then asks students to respond with "Excuse me/Please...". This is done through role-playing in pairs, fostering natural dialogue and interaction.

6. Practice "Explanation, Habit, Special" together. The teacher first asks, "What are your habits when eating/drinking tea?" After the students answer, the teacher asks the other students, "Do you think his/her habit is special?" Then, the teacher asks, "Please explain why you think it's special?" for the students to practice. At this point, the teacher uses some common student habits as a basis for further discussion.

7. Identify areas of habit and personality that can be practiced, and discuss what constitutes "special." "Choose" is a verb used to select various things. The teacher should ask students in different situations, "Which one would you/want to choose? How would you choose?" Because "choose" cannot be used as a noun, avoid sentences that require the noun " choose ." For example, do not say "*the best choice," but rather "the best option." If "choose" is added here, the teacher must be able to clearly explain the difference between "choose" as a verb and "select."

III. Grammar Teaching 1. A is not as/as... as B

(1) The sentence pattern "A is not as good as B..." compares two things, indicating that A is not as good as B in a certain way or degree. It needs to be followed by a stative verb (Vs) / adjective. (2) This sentence pattern is one of the forms of comparative sentences and is easily confused with "A is better than B...", so it needs to be practiced repeatedly. "A is better than B..." often expresses whether A is better or worse, depending on the situation or degree that follows.

"A is not as good as B..." often expresses that A is not as good or as bad as B. For example, "Summer here is more comfortable than summer in Taiwan." Using the sentence pattern in this lesson, it would be "Summer in Taiwan is not as comfortable as summer here." The teacher can first review "A is better than B..." and then replace it with "A is not as good as B...". (3) When a student says "Coffee is better than oolong tea", if other students want to express "Oolong tea is better than coffee" and say "*Coffee is worse than oolong tea", the teacher should guide the students to use "Coffee is not as good as oolong tea".

2. VV Watch

(1) When a monosyllabic action verb is reduplicated and followed by "ÿ" (kàn), the tone of the speech implies "to try". "ÿ" here doesn't have a special meaning; it's not the verb "to look". Commonly used verbs include "ÿ" (chÿ), "ÿ" (hÿ), and "ÿ" (chÿ).

"Do, listen, learn, write, wear, stroll, fight, etc."

Machine Translated by Google

(2) The teacher uses various scenarios and pictures to interact with students by asking questions. For example: "Have you ever drunk Taiwanese oolong tea? Would you like to try it?", "Can you make roast turkey? Would you like to try it?", "Have you studied French? Would you like to try it?", etc. (3) Some people in Taiwan use "*drink it and see" or "try it and see," which is incorrect. If a student hears this and asks about it, the teacher explains that "see" here has become grammatical and does not have the meaning of "see," so the verb can be reduplicated. Therefore, "VV see" forms a verb phrase.

3. Separable Verbs (1) In Chinese, there is a type of verb called separable verbs, whose internal structure is "verb + noun". Its nature is that "V + N" together form a word similar to "verb + object". The meaning is the same when separated, but other components can be added in the middle.

(2) The separable words learned in this set of books (B1-B3) include: eating, drinking tea, learning Chinese, singing, cooking, running, watching TV, going to work, attending class, going online, taking a photo, meeting, graduating, getting married, etc. (3) Practice separating the words according to the examples of separable words in the book, using different components inserted in the middle. Several types of exercises can both review previously learned vocabulary and prevent confusion.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. I haven't been as busy as before lately.

2. What kind of tea are you drinking? It smells delicious.

3. Could you please give me a drink?

4. What are the differences in taste between these two types of tea?

5. Black tea has a stronger flavor, while oolong tea has a more fragrant aroma. 6. Taiwanese tea is of very high quality; you'll see once you try it.

7. It tastes a little bitter and a little sweet, which is quite unique.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher reads sentences from the text, taking on the roles of Wang Mingwen and Gao Liya respectively. Students listen to the sentences first. (Teacher...) You can speak while demonstrating new words or key sentences.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with independent dialogue and including important vocabulary and grammar points. This is to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part initially. During teaching, the teacher should first present the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. Through this...

Machine Translated by Google

The dialogue helps students understand the meaning and also allows them to pronounce the sentences. Then, other questions are used to have students practice these key sentences repeatedly.

4. This lesson is divided into three parts.

Part One Text

Wang Mingwen: Gao Liya, have you been busy lately? I'd like to meet up and chat.

Gao Liya: I haven't been as busy as before. The day after tomorrow is the weekend, and He hope and I are both free.

Wang Mingwen: I'm so glad you could come together. Please come to my house for tea!

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: the grammar "A is not as good as B, so Vs" and the language function "invite". (2) Review "A is better than B + Vs", and then guide students to "A is not as good as B / so Vs". Refer to the grammar explanation for teaching suggestions. The teacher uses various weather, drinks, food, workplaces, etc. to practice grammar. (3) "Invite" is a basic interpersonal interaction skill. The teacher uses the form of invitation (sentence) in this lesson as an example to let students practice. The person who wants to invite the other party should first politely and tactfully ask about the other party's recent situation, such as: "Are you busy lately? / What are you busy with lately? / Are you free lately?" Then say "I want to invite you... / Are you free to go with me...? / Shall we go to...?" (4) The teacher provides a scenario and asks students to practice how to invite and how to respond to other people's invitations in pairs.

Part Two Texts

Wang Mingwen: Gao Liya, He Xi, welcome, please come in. Gao Liya: Mingwen, what kind of tea are you drinking? It smells wonderful.

Wang Mingwen: I'm drinking oolong tea. Would you like to try some?

Gao Liya: Sure! I've never had Taiwanese tea before, could you please give me a cup?

Wang Mingwen: No trouble at all! Tea is meant to be enjoyed with friends. I have oolong tea and black tea here, would you like some? Which one? Gao Liya: What's the difference in taste between these two teas? Wang Mingwen: Black tea has a stronger flavor, while oolong tea smells more fragrant, but its taste is a bit lighter than black tea. Gao Liya: He Xi and I both like fragrant teas, so we'll choose oolong tea.

Wang Mingwen: Okay. It will take a little over two minutes to brew the tea, please wait a moment.

(1) This section aims to practice the "asking" function of language, expressing interest and curiosity while asking questions. Students can ask others by saying "What are you doing? Look...". Teachers can practice with food, such as: "What are you eating? It smells delicious. / What are you eating? It looks delicious. / What are you drinking? It smells delicious. / What are you brewing? It smells delicious." Depending on the students' abilities, the practice can be extended with "What are you doing? It looks like... / What are you writing? It looks like...". (2) The language function of the text "I haven't had Taiwanese tea before, could you please give me a cup?" is "making a request." The focus is on teaching students to politely ask others to do things. Teachers can provide scenarios, such as: "I haven't had Taiwanese tea before, could you please introduce it to me? / I don't know this company, could you please introduce it to me? / I don't know how to use this product, could you please explain it to me?" In addition, when shopping, students can also...

Machine Translated by Google

This expression is commonly used, such as: "Could you please give me a cup of coffee and a sandwich?" / "Could you please show me that phone?"

(3) Practice the questioning function again. When students want to know something, ask them to ask questions such as "What are the differences between these two XX/A and B?" The teacher asks students to ask and answer questions in pairs about different foods, drinks, companies, products, national characteristics, etc.

(4) Train students to articulate the differences between two things. Comparative sentence grammar can be used, such as: "A is more..., but B is more... / A is not as good as B... / A is better than B..., but B is better than A..." etc. Pay attention to the logical consistency of the sentences, and sentences using "but" indicate that the opinions/views are different.

Part Three Texts

Gao Liya: It seems that Chinese people don't add anything to their tea, is that right?

Wang Mingwen: Yes. You understand the Chinese tea-drinking habits, so I don't need to explain.

Goria: These teas have such interesting names! Where did you buy them?

Wang Mingwen: These teas weren't bought here; I brought them from Taiwan. Taiwanese tea is of very high quality. You'll know once you try it. How does it taste?

Gao Liya: Hmm... it tastes a little bitter and a little sweet, it's quite unique. Wang Mingwen: This time you drank a tea that was rather mild in flavor but very fragrant. If you have the chance, I'll treat you to some. A stronger flavor of Oriental Beauty tea.

(1) The cultural point that can be discussed in this paragraph is "Chinese people seem to drink tea without adding anything." From this perspective, ask students to talk about their understanding of Chinese tea-drinking habits and whether they know what Taiwanese (Chinese) people value (are particular) when drinking tea. The water temperature, time, and teaware will vary depending on the type of tea.

(2) Compare modern tea with traditional tea. Modern tea has different flavors and may include other ingredients, such as bubble tea. The traditional way of drinking tea is to steep tea leaves in hot water, but now iced tea is everywhere. The teacher can use pictures to show various tea drinks from Taiwanese beverage shops and some modified tea drinks, such as winter melon tea and flower tea.

(3) Ask students if they have seen any shops selling Taiwanese tea near their homes, or if they have bought any tea for brewing. If Taiwanese tea is unavailable, what other countries' teas are available? Then discuss what tea beverages are available.

(4) You can talk about the different types of tea from different countries and how to say them, based on the ancestral home (mother country) of the students in the class. This is combined with the fifth integrated activity of this lesson. (5) Review "a little + Vs", and practice "a little bitter, a little sweet" with different beverages. In particular, the expression "tea is a little sweet" may be different from the students' imagination of "sweet". The teacher can explain it simply. In fact, Chinese people like to say "sweet" when drinking tea, but "sweet" is difficult for students of this level to understand, so "sweet" is used instead.

Machine Translated by Google

(6) The teacher asks questions like "If you had the chance..." to create a scenario for students and encourage them to speak. For example: "If you had the chance, where would you like to travel? If you had the chance, what sport would you like to learn? If you had the chance, what job would you like to change to?" etc. Teaching process for each part of the text: (1) Display sentences and mark key vocabulary and grammar. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar. (3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook.

(4) Use the materials you have already learned to do extended exercises. (5) Integrate the content of this section and practice using the key sentences in this section by asking questions.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) Why did Wang Mingwen call Gao Liya? (2) When did Gao Liya ask when she would be free? (3) Did Gao Liya go to meet Wang Mingwen alone? (4) What did Gao Liya see Wang Mingwen doing when she arrived at his house? (5) What did Gao Liya think of the tea Wang Mingwen brewed? (6) Gao Liya wanted to try oolong tea. What did she say to Wang Mingwen?

(7) What are the differences between black tea and oolong tea? (8) What kind of tea did Gao Liya choose? Why?

(9) How long should tea be steeped, according to

Wang Mingwen? (10) Do Chinese people add anything to their tea? (11) Does Gao Liya know about the tea-drinking habits of Chinese people? (12) Where did Wang Mingwen buy the tea he brewed? What is the quality of the tea? (13) What does Gao Liya think of the taste of oolong tea? (14) If there is an opportunity in the future, what kind of tea would Wang Mingwen invite Gao Liya to drink? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions)

(1) What kind of tea do people in your country usually drink?

(2) Can you buy Taiwanese tea in your country? (3) Have you ever drunk Taiwanese tea? Which type of Taiwanese tea do you like to drink?

(4) Do people in your country have any special habits when drinking tea? (5) What is the most popular beverage in your country? Coffee? Water?

(6) Do you find the method of brewing tea interesting? Is it troublesome?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7.

Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...
Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method:

a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups. b.

The teacher calls on students to take turns reading the dialogue aloud.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method:

a. Have students fill in the dialogue. b. The teacher calls on students to read aloud or write down the answers.

c. Write Chinese characters or pinyin, depending on the student's level.

d. If students learn quickly and at a high level, teachers can create additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters they practice writing.

3. Listening and speaking interactive exercises

First, find your favorite drink, and then tell everyone what it is, following the sentences below.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2)

Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind you of the sentences to be used.

b. The teacher asked a student to report to the class what his favorite drink was.

c. When listening to others' reports, students should think about what questions to ask, such as asking about others' favorite drinks.

4. Expression Practice

Make yourself a drink. Using the ingredients shown in the picture below, make a special beverage and introduce your creation to everyone.

(1) Objective: To train students to complete a short essay based on their own ideas and then report it orally. (2)

Method:

a. Explain the activity format. b. Let students choose their own materials and write a short essay about their homemade beverage. c.

Students explain to everyone what materials they used and why they did it that way. d. The teacher asks students to name their beverage and promote it to everyone.

5. Task Activities

Ask students to research and then describe which countries in the world enjoy drinking tea? What kind of tea do they drink? Have you ever tried it?

(1) Objective: To train students to independently find information and report it in Chinese. (2) Method:

a. Ask students to go home and find a target country and research relevant information.

b. Ask students to report in the next class. c. If students are interested in tea from countries not listed in the table, they can find information about other countries on their own.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials : Teachers

may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Wang Mingwen loved oolong tea, so he brought some Taiwanese tea with him when he went to work in the United States. One day, he invited Gao Liya and He Xi to his home for some Taiwanese tea. Gao Liya preferred strong black tea, while He Xi preferred oolong tea, which was less strong. Wang Mingwen told them that although Taiwanese tea was a little bitter, many Taiwanese people enjoyed it, with older people preferring it hot and younger people preferring it iced.

question:

( 1. Wang Mingwen brought oolong tea to the United States. 2.

Gao Liya doesn't like strong black tea. 3. He Xi prefers oolong tea. 4.

( ( Taiwanese people like to drink hot oolong tea.

ÿ Teaching Tips:

Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs or the learning environment. If students are unwilling to learn Chinese characters or do not write them well, teachers can first focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing Chinese characters. Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols/ Pinyin to practice listening and speaking first, while simultaneously learning Chinese characters, hoping to attract students' interest in writing Chinese characters.

Lesson Six

My colleagues are very good to me.

I. Learning Objectives

Topic: Getting along with others

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Describe your own work situation. 2. Describe someone else's personality. 3. Describe your interactions with colleagues. 4. Express concern for others.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. The teacher uses photos of the company building and office interiors to guide the discussion to topics such as "company name, who are the colleagues, and what are the colleagues like." 2. Prepare several vocabulary words related to people's age, personality, and attitude, such as "young, individualistic, lively, enthusiastic, friendly, caring," and then ask students, "Are your colleagues all young? Are your colleagues lively? Are they enthusiastic towards their colleagues? Are they friendly to their colleagues? Do they take care of their colleagues?" This leads to the lesson's focus on learning to describe people's personality and attitude.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. Begin by practicing vocabulary such as "environment," "adapt," "pressure," "everything," and "satisfaction." The teacher asks questions such as: "Is your work environment good? Is your work stressful? Do you still feel a lot of pressure? Have you adapted to your current work environment? Have you adapted to everything? Why can't you adapt yet? When do you feel the most pressure at work? Is everything at your current job good? Are you satisfied with your current job? Are you satisfied with your current job?" Practice new vocabulary around these aspects.

Machine Translated by Google

2. "However" is a conjunction indicating a change in direction, and is less forceful than "but," and is mostly used in spoken language. For example: "He used to dislike..." She used to like talking, but now she's willing to chat with everyone.

3. This lesson includes a set of important vocabulary words related to personality: "personality, lively, enthusiastic, kind, caring, and getting along." These were introduced during the warm-up activity, and the teacher will then practice these words in different scenarios. For example: "How do you feel about your own personality? What kind of friends do you like? What kind of friends do you find easiest to get along with? What kind of people do you find most difficult to get along with?" Note: "Getting along" must be expressed as "A and B get along well…/We get along well…", not as "*I get along with him…".

4. Practice vocabulary related to work attitude together, such as "willing, solve, serious, mutual, help (review), assist (review)", etc. Ask students, "When you are working, are your colleagues serious? Are your colleagues willing to help you? Will your colleagues help you solve problems? Are your colleagues willing to help each other?"

5. "ÿÿ" is an adverb and needs to be followed by a verb. The verbs that can be practiced together in this lesson are "ÿÿ". Help each other, take care of each other, and help each other.

6. The new word "ÿÿ" in this lesson means "fortunately," which is different from the "ÿÿ" in "A: Do you think oolong tea is delicious? B: I think it's okay." The teacher can explain the multiple meanings of a single word in Chinese. 7. The new word "ÿÿ" in this lesson has many uses and can correspond to multiple English words. Students should be prevented from directly translating it as "get." The teacher will first practice using previously learned abstract nouns, such as: "ÿ……ÿÿ" (gain experience), "ÿ……ÿÿ" (gain opportunity).

8. "Reassure" is often used to tell others not to worry about problems, so "I will take care of myself, please rest assured, parents.", "I will do a good job, please rest assured, boss.", "His parents are worried about him going abroad alone." 9. In this lesson, "take care" is a verb, meaning "to take care of oneself, to take care of a sick person." The usage of the noun can be taught depending on the students' level. A common example is: "Thank you for taking care of me."

10. Many stative verbs (Vs) in this lesson can be used as adverbs, such as the usage of "ÿ" (de) in Grammar 5. Teachers can decide whether to practice these usages based on students' levels. For example: "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (work diligently), "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ/ÿÿÿ" (help me enthusiastically/help me), "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (go on vacation with peace of mind). 11. This lesson teaches the complements "ÿ" (wan) and "ÿ" (dong). "ÿ" (dong) can be used alone, such as: "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (Do you understand what the teacher said?). However, "ÿ" (wan) needs to be practiced in conjunction with grammar. Therefore, it is best to practice them together with grammar. 12. The new words "ÿÿÿ" (mei zuo wan), "ÿÿÿ" (ting bu dong), and "ÿÿÿ" (kan bu dong) should be practiced as whole words. When reading the text, the teacher should design scenarios for students to use these words directly.

III. Grammar Teaching 1. Verb Complement "ÿ"

(1) The complement “ÿ” follows the verb to form a verb complement structure, indicating that the action has been completed. It is expressed as “V + ÿ”, indicating a result. For example, textbook example (1). If the action has been done but not completed (no result), it is expressed as “ÿ + V ÿ”, indicating that the action is not completed. For example, textbook example (2).

Machine Translated by Google

(2) The text first teaches the structure of "finished" and "not finished" of actions. Therefore, it is recommended that teachers practice these two usages first, using the grammatical examples in the book, and then integrate the possible complements of "finished" and "not finished" from Grammar 3.

(3) Chinese complements are very difficult for foreign students, and it takes them a long time to use them naturally. Therefore, teachers should not over-explain and should only practice with verbs they have already learned. For example: "eat finished/not finished eating", "drink finished/not finished drinking", "read finished/not finished reading", "done finished/not finished doing", "sold out/not finished selling", "said finished/not finished speaking", etc. It should also be noted that not all verbs can be paired with the complement "ÿ" (wán). For example, one cannot say "ÿÿÿ" (*ÿÿ) or "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ ...

2. Verb complement "understand"

(1) When the complement “ÿ” follows a verb to form a verb complement structure, it indicates whether or not one “understands” what has been heard or seen. Only the verbs “ÿ” and “ÿ” can be used. If one “saw or heard” and “understood”, use “V + ÿÿ”. For example, textbook example (1). Use “ÿV ÿ” to express negation, for example, textbook example (2). (2) The teacher first practices the structure of “ÿÿÿ/ÿÿÿ, ÿÿÿ/ÿÿÿ” with the action following grammar one. Practice with the grammar examples in the book, and then incorporate the possible complements of “ÿ ÿÿ, ÿÿÿ” from grammar three.

3. Potential Capability

(1) This structure is formed by inserting “ÿ” or “ÿ” in the middle of a verb complement to indicate the possibility of achieving the expected result after the verb action. For example, textbook example (1) “ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ?” indicates that the questioner does not know the ability of the person being asked and wants to know “whether the person being asked has the ability (possibility) to understand Chinese”.

(2) When using this structure to ask a question, the answer may be affirmative or negative. Affirmative answers are shown in textbook example (1). Negative answers are shown in textbook example (2). The structure "affirmative + negative" can also be used to ask questions in interrogative sentences, as shown in textbook example (3).

(3) This grammar point is more difficult to translate directly word by word because of the insertion of "ÿ/ÿ". Therefore, teachers can design various appropriate scenarios for practice based on the concept of the whole word. For example, the grammar exercise 1 is "Have you finished that cup of oolong tea?", and the grammar exercise 3 is "This cup of oolong tea is a large cup, can you finish it?". The grammar exercise 1 is "Did you understand what the teacher said?", and the grammar exercise 3 is "Do you understand what the teacher said?". With such tiered practice, students can more easily distinguish the differences.

(4) When using complements, they often appear in the form of topic sentences, such as: "Can you understand French? / Have you finished your work for today?" This sounds more common to most people, but since the grammar of topic sentences has not yet been taught in this lesson (topic sentences are the grammar of Lesson 9), when teaching complements, we should first teach students in the form of general declarative sentences, such as "Can you understand French? / Have you finished your work for today?" If the students are proficient, the teacher can try changing the sentence arrangement to present it in the form of a topic sentence.

Machine Translated by Google

4. Some...some...

(1) "Some..., some..." indicates that the topic being discussed has several parts, and describes the situation of each part. Together, they can sometimes represent the whole topic. "Some" is followed by a noun, such as: person, time, place, etc.

(2) If "sometimes…, sometimes…" is followed by "time", it can also be said as "sometimes…, sometimes…", but "some places…, some places…" is not appropriate. To avoid confusion among students, it is better to teach "sometimes + time/place/person…, sometimes + time/place/person…".

(3) It is simplest for teachers to use two pictures to let students practice this grammar.

5. VsVsÿ+ V (redundancy of stative verbs as adverbs)

(1) When a stative verb is reduplicated and placed before the main verb, it becomes an adverbial modifying the following verb. "ÿ" is the auxiliary verb in this structure. Commonly used stative verbs include "ÿ" and "ÿ". (2) The purpose of this grammar exercise is to introduce the structural auxiliary verb "ÿ". We have already learned two other structural auxiliary verbs, "ÿ" and "ÿ". The teacher can briefly explain the differences between the three in this lesson.

(3) In Liu Yuehua's "Practical Modern Chinese Grammar", the function of structural particles is to connect words to form phrases with syntactic relationships. For example, "ÿ" connects the attributive and its headword, such as: "ÿÿÿÿ" (books for learning Chinese) and "ÿ ÿÿÿ" (beautiful seaside). "ÿ" connects the complement and its headword, such as: "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (cooking very well) and "ÿÿÿÿ" (running very fast). "ÿ" connects the adverbial and its headword, such as: "ÿÿÿÿ" (write carefully) and "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (explain carefully).

(4) Find words that have been learned and can be used as adverbs for practice, such as the explanation of vocabulary teaching (10).

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. We are doing well. 2. I was very busy when I first arrived, and I often didn't finish my work.

3. Fortunately, my colleagues are all very helpful and willing to assist me. 4. If I encounter any materials that I don't understand, my colleagues also help me resolve them.

5. Although everyone has different personalities—some are lively, others are friendly—6. My colleagues are all very dedicated and helpful to each other; I'm very happy working here. 7. I believe this will definitely benefit my future.

8. My parents want me to tell you to take good care of yourself.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher reads sentences from the text, taking on the roles of Wang Mingwen and Wang Jiawen respectively. Students listen to the sentences first. (Teacher...)
You can speak while demonstrating new words or key sentences.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into four parts, each with independent dialogue and including important vocabulary and grammar points. This is to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part. When teaching, the teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. Through this dialogue, students understand the meaning and can also pronounce the sentences. Then, use other questions to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. This lesson is divided into four parts.

Part One Text

Wang Mingwen: Hello, Jiawen, it's me. How are Mom and Dad? Wang

Jiawen: We're doing well. How about you? How's work?

Wang Mingwen: I was very busy when I first arrived, and I often didn't finish my work. But now I've gotten used to it.

Wang Jiawen: Wow! You must be under a lot of pressure.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: the phrase "everything is fine" to express one's current situation and the grammar "not finished".

(2) First, practice how to respond appropriately when someone greets you. Show the sentences in a question-and-answer format: "A: How have you been lately? How is your work? Are your parents doing well? B: Everything is fine." Students should understand that this is a complete and polite way to respond.

(3) Wang Mingwen "often didn't finish his work when he first arrived," but "after a few months / he adapted." After that, he finished all his work. Let's practice grammar one.

(4) Ask students, "Do you usually not finish your work? What do you do if you don't finish?" Practice this part of the sentence. (5) Discuss the reasons why Wang Mingwen's work pressure is very high by asking "Is the work pressure high?" Ask students, "Do you have the same situation as Wang Mingwen? What do you do if the work pressure is too high?" (6) Use "high pressure/low pressure/no pressure" more often to avoid students saying "*high pressure/lots of pressure" etc.

Part Two Texts

(Wang Jiawen: Wow! You must be under a lot of pressure.)

Wang Mingwen: Luckily, my colleagues are all very helpful and willing to assist me.

Wang Jiawen: It sounds like your colleagues treat you very well!

Wang Mingwen: Yes! If I have materials that I don't understand or can't read, my colleagues help me solve them.

Wang Jiawen: How many colleagues are there in your department?

Wang Mingwen: There are about twenty colleagues, all of them are very young. Although they have different personalities, some are lively, some... They are friendly, but easy to get along with.

Machine Translated by Google

(1) The focus of this lesson is on describing the personality and attitude of colleagues. (2)

Ask the question: "When you are at work, if you don't understand something, will your colleagues help you?" Practice the separable words "help/ help you". Ask students to answer with "My colleagues will help me". Then ask "How do your colleagues help you? What kind of help do they give you?" to let students talk about how their colleagues usually "help each other". (3) The second topic to be discussed is "How many colleagues are in your department? What are their personalities like? Are they easy to get along with?" Ask students to describe based on their own situation.

(4) You can practice by asking questions based on the suggestions in the vocabulary exercise section.

Part Three Texts

Wang Jiawen: You're very satisfied with your current job, right?

Wang Mingwen: Because the working environment here is very good, my colleagues are all very dedicated and helpful to each other, so I... I enjoy working here.

Wang Jiawen: I think you made the right decision to work in the United States.

Wang Mingwen: Since coming here, I've gained a lot of experience, which I believe will definitely benefit my future.

(1) The focus of this lesson is on explaining job satisfaction and its benefits to one's future. (2) Practice expressing "satisfaction with..." by asking questions such as, "Are you satisfied with your job? What aspects are you most satisfied with? What aspects are you dissatisfied with?" Ask students to express their opinions based on their own work experiences. (3) Ask questions such as, "Do you think your company will continue to grow in the future? What do you think about your current job and its future?" Will things get better and better? Let's practice.

(4) Practice by asking questions such as "Did you have any work experience before you found your current job? What kind of work experience do you think is important for your future/job search?" and "If you were the boss/manager, would you be willing to give a chance to someone without work experience?" (5) Ask students to ask questions such as "Do you hope/do you want to work abroad? Are you willing to gain work experience abroad?" "Will it be good for the future?" Share your opinion.

Part Four Texts

Wang Jiawen: My parents told me to tell you to take good care of yourself.

Wang Mingwen: Please don't worry, Mom and Dad, I will take care of myself.

The focus of this lesson is on "the way Chinese parents give advice." Using the sentence patterns "A: My parents told me to tell you, (you) should take good care of yourself…." and "B: Please don't worry, I will…", we will design scenarios to help students understand how to politely and effectively respond when others tell them to take care of themselves, pay attention to their health, and be careful.

Respond appropriately to the other person. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display the sentences and mark the key vocabulary and grammar points.

(2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding the vocabulary and grammar.

(3) Have students practice the vocabulary and grammar and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook.

Machine Translated by Google

(4) Use the materials you have already learned to do extended exercises. (5) Integrate the content of this section and practice using the key sentences in this section by asking questions.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) Who are the two people speaking in this lesson? Who is Wang Jiawen?

(2) Why did Wang Jiawen call his brother? (3) What did Wang Mingwen say about his work situation? (4) Is Wang Mingwen under a lot of work pressure? (5) If Wang Mingwen doesn't finish his work, will his colleagues help him? (6) How many colleagues are in Wang Mingwen's department? What are they like? (7) Does Wang Mingwen have a good relationship with his colleagues?

(8) Is Wang Mingwen satisfied with his current job? (9) Does Wang Jiawen think it's beneficial for his brother to work in the United States? Why? (10) What do Wang Mingwen's parents want to say to him? What will Wang Mingwen say? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation:

(Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (11) How is your company? (12) Do you like your job? Why? (13) How many colleagues are in your department? How many people are there in your company? (14) What are your colleagues like?

(15) How do you get along with your colleagues? Are there any problems? (16) Are your colleagues in your department hardworking? Do they help each other? (17)

Do you want to change jobs? Why? (18) Do you think your current job is beneficial to your future?

(19) If you had the opportunity, would you like to work abroad?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method: a. Have students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Writing Chinese characters or pinyin can be arranged according to the students' level. d. If students learn quickly and at a high level, the teacher can create additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters to be written.

3. I heard about the interactive activities.

Please choose one person to introduce your relationship, their personality, and interests to everyone. Please use the following sentences in pairs to ask and answer questions to give the introduction.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and new words learned in this lesson fluently.

(2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind students of the sentences to be used. b. Have students ask each other questions, completing the sentences as they do so.

c. The teacher asked a student to report to the class about the student he had visited.

d. The teacher may also select two students to complete the dialogue in front of the whole class.

4. Expression Exercise: In the picture in the textbook, first choose something you plan to do and who you plan to do it with, then use the following sentences to explain why.

(1) Objective: To train students to write short essays based on their own ideas and then report them orally. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format.

b. Let students write down what they want to do.

c. Students then complete the short passage according to the structure.

d. Have students take turns reading their short essays to the class.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials : Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Zhang Jia'an works at a trading company. Her department has over a dozen colleagues, some very young, others with over twenty years of experience. Zhang Jia'an likes her colleagues very much because they are all hardworking and helpful to each other. When Jia'an encounters documents she doesn't understand, her colleagues explain them to her and tell her how to proceed. They often go out to eat and chat together, getting along very well, so Jia'an feels no pressure working there.

question:

( 1. Zhang Jia'an's colleagues are all young. 2. If Jia'an ( can't understand some documents, her colleagues will help her. 3. Jia'an gets along ( well with her colleagues. 4. Although her colleagues

ÿ Teaching Tips:

Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs or the learning environment. If students are unwilling to learn Chinese characters or do not write them well, teachers can first focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing Chinese characters. Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols/Pinyin to practice listening and speaking first, while simultaneously learning Chinese characters, hoping to attract students' interest in writing Chinese characters.

Taiwanese tea

Taiwanese people have a long history of making and drinking tea. According to the production methods, tea can be divided into black tea, green tea and oolong tea, among which oolong tea is the most characteristic of Taiwanese tea.

Oolong tea comes in different varieties and flavors, mainly due to its processing methods. It's based on a semi-fermentation process, using varying degrees of fermentation and roasting to create different types of oolong tea. For example, the lighter-tasting Baozhong tea and the stronger-tasting Tieguanyin are both well-known varieties. In Taiwan, people enjoy using tea to socialize. Many families have a tea table in their living room, always stocked with a tea set and tea leaves. When friends come over, they brew and enjoy tea while chatting. After the 1970s, Taiwanese society began to emphasize "tea art," often presented through tea ceremonies. A formal tea ceremony involves a professional tea master brewing the tea, allowing guests to better appreciate its aroma and flavor. Elegant utensils are used, including small teapots, aroma cups, and tasting cups. A tablecloth is laid on the tea table, and a vase of flowers is placed on it. Tea snacks or traditional music are often provided to complement the tea, creating a refined and pleasant atmosphere.

More than a century after oolong tea gained international renown, bubble tea, created in Taiwan, has once again become a global favorite. Today in Taiwan, tea drinking remains a symbol of refined culture and a medium for connecting with friends. Bubble tea

Its innovation and rise have given Taiwanese tea new life and vitality.

Lesson 7

I went to Europe on a business trip

I. Learning Objectives

Subject: Business Trip

After completing this lesson, you will be able to use Chinese to: 1. Explain the content and purpose of a business trip. 2. Explain the results of work negotiations with others. 3. Describe the environment and transportation of a certain region.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activity 1. The teacher prepares a world map and labels the Chinese names of several European countries. First, ask the students, "Have you ever been to Europe? Have you ever been to XX country? Why did you go?" Then, based on the students' responses, see if the discussion can extend to other topics. "On business trip".

2. If students have experience with business trips, ask them, "Are business trips tiring? Do you enjoy them? What's the most troublesome situation during a business trip? When you go on a business trip, do you ever stop by to do some sightseeing?" 3. If students have never been on a business trip abroad, ask them, "Does your current job require you to travel to other parts of the country?" "Is it bad? Are there opportunities to travel for work?" Ask students to describe their current work situation.

II. Vocabulary Teaching

1. This lesson focuses on using transportation, communicating with others, visiting relatives, and learning about other cultures while traveling for business. Vocabulary can be categorized as follows. 2. When teaching transportation-related vocabulary, first review words from previous lessons and Lesson 2 of this book, such as "airplane," "driving," "renting a car," "taking a ride," and "sitting." Then present words from this lesson such as "train," "subway," "bus," and "transportation." Practice using "verb + means of transportation," such as "How do you usually go to work? Do you drive yourself out on weekends?" If students don't have a car...

Machine Translated by Google

Ask questions like, "How do you usually get to work? Do you prefer the subway or the bus?" and "If you want to travel to a more distant place, would you rent a car or take the train? Why?" Practice using different modes of transportation until you are familiar with them. 3. Using local/national transportation as a theme, have students practice describing the local transportation situation, such as: "Do you think the transportation here/where you live is good? Is it convenient?", "What other modes of transportation do you think we should have here (add the word 'modes')?", "Which places you've been to have convenient and good transportation?" Lead into the topic of "transportation." Note: The Chinese word "ÿÿ" (transportation) and the English word "traffic" have different usages. Avoid students saying "*There is traffic during rush hour," and add the word "traffic jam" if necessary.

4. Another topic in this lesson is "Communicating with others in a language other than the student's native language/foreign language." Review the previous lesson's "understanding/not understanding, understanding/not understanding," and ask students, "Can you speak German? Can you speak French?" "Can you understand German? Can you read German?" Then introduce the questions, such as, "If your boss asked you to go on a business trip or travel to Germany, would you be willing? Why?" and "If you can't communicate with others in German, what language would you use to communicate?" Have students practice, "I can speak XX (English), and I communicate with them in English." 5. Work-related vocabulary in this lesson includes "investment, discussing cooperation/business, and a successful negotiation." Ask students, "Does his company have branches abroad/in his home country? Does the boss plan to open a branch?" and "If you were to invest, in what area would you invest?" It may be necessary to supplement some investment-related vocabulary, such as: stocks, foreign currency, real estate, etc. Another topic is discussing collaborations/trade deals with others. Questions include, "Does your job require you to discuss collaborations with others? Do you often negotiate sales with other companies?" If a student indicates they need to discuss business with other companies, ask, "Is negotiating collaborations/deals easy? Do you always have smooth negotiations?" This allows students to describe their work-related experiences.

6. The stative verb "smoothly" can be used in many other ways. Teachers can provide situational exercises, such as: "Did everything go smoothly on your last vacation?" or "When you first graduated, was it easy to find a job? How can you find a job smoothly?" 7. The adverb "by the way" indicates that after doing one thing, it's convenient and effortless to do other things. Teachers can provide situational exercises, such as: "I'm going to buy coffee, would you like me to buy you one while I'm at it?" or "Lisa went on vacation, what gifts did she buy for everyone?" or "You're going home, could you take me to the station while you're at it?"

8. The word "ÿÿ" (qiú jiào) has a polite and courteous function in asking others for advice. While "ÿÿ……" (wèng wèi qÿng) is commonly used to ask about something, "ÿÿ" indicates that the matter being inquired about is more difficult, complex, or involves deeper knowledge. When using "ÿÿ," you can directly say, "May I/can I ask you something?" Using "A asked/sought B for advice..." is also acceptable, but the word "sought" hasn't been taught yet.

9. The meaning of the new word "ÿ" in this lesson is different from what we've learned before, so the teacher can review it. (e.g., driving a car, opening a door) Examples such as "opening a company" illustrate the phenomenon of multiple meanings in Chinese characters.

10. In this lesson, "ÿ" is a complement, and its meaning will be practiced together with other words in the grammar section. We can also review different uses of "ÿ" such as "ÿÿ" (very good) and "ÿÿÿ" (very happy). 11. Through the vocabulary words "ÿÿ" (aunt) and "ÿÿ" (cousin) in this lesson, we will review Chinese kinship terms.

Machine Translated by Google

III. Grammar Teaching 1. The complement "ÿ" indicating successful completion

(1) “ÿ” is used as a complement after a verb to indicate that the action has successfully achieved the intended goal. “Vÿ” is used when the action is completed and the goal is achieved, as in textbook example (1). “ÿV ÿ” is used when the action has been done but the goal has not been achieved, as in textbook example (2). “V + ÿÿÿ + ÿ” is used when there is a potential possibility of the action being completed, as in textbook example (3).

(2) The complement “ÿ” has appeared many times in previous lessons. Due to the complexity of the grammar, it was only presented as a whole word, such as “ÿÿ”, “ÿÿ”, “ÿÿ”. This lesson can take the opportunity to practice it again in the form of a complement. For example, practice “A: Can you see the stars in the sky? B: I saw them, they are so beautiful.” (3) At this time, the teacher should first practice more concrete and easier-to-understand words, such as “ÿÿÿ”, “ÿÿÿ”, “ÿÿÿ”, “ÿÿÿ”, “ÿÿÿ”, “ÿÿÿ”, etc. The more abstract words “ÿÿÿ”/“ÿÿÿ” should be practiced depending on the situation.

(4) Using the grammar exercises in the book, students practice extensively on the contexts in which "V get/V don't get/not get/V arrive" are used, so that they can clearly understand when to use "can't see/can't buy..." and when to use "didn't see/didn't buy..." and distinguish the difference between the two.

2. The complement "ÿ" indicating readiness

(1) "ÿ" is used as a complement after a verb to indicate that the action has been properly completed and the result has reached an ideal and satisfactory level. "V ÿ" is used when the action is ready and can be completed. For example, textbook example (1). "ÿV ÿ" is used when the action is not ready. For example, textbook example (2). "V + ÿ/ÿ + ÿ" is used when the action has a possibility of being completed. For example, textbook example (3).

(2) The complement "V + ÿ" overlaps with "V + ÿ" in Lesson 6, but their meanings are not entirely the same. For example, "ÿ + ÿ" means that when doing something, a person's ability, time, and workload are sufficient to complete the task. "ÿ + ÿ" means that the task can be completed and done satisfactorily. (3) In some sentences, both "V + ÿ" and "V + ÿ" are acceptable. The teacher should clearly explain the reasons why they can be used in those situations. For example, when the boss asks "Have you done your work?" versus "Have you finished your work?", the former indicates that the boss hopes you have done a good job and are satisfied with it. The latter is the boss asking if you have finished your work.

(4) Using the grammar exercises in the book, students practice extensively on the contexts in which "V is good / V is bad / not good / V is good" are used, so that they can clearly understand when to use "do not do well" and when to use "did not do well", and distinguish the difference between the two.

(5) There are limitations on the verbs that can be used with the complement "ÿ" (hÿo). The teacher will give examples of commonly used verbs for practice, such as: "ÿ" (zuô), "ÿÿ" (bÿnzhèn), and "ÿ" (hÿo). "Bake, find, think, rent, buy", etc.

3. Increasingly

(1) "More and more" indicates that the state or degree of the subject is gradually increasing or decreasing. The word following "more and more" must be a stative verb (Vs), such as: good, fast, more, less, cold, hot, bland, cheap, delicious, etc. The whole sentence ends with "ÿ".

Machine Translated by Google

(2) This is an easy-to-understand, easy-to-use, and frequently used grammar. Teachers can use various scenarios and pictures to practice a lot of the state verbs that have already been learned.

(3) In the fourth lesson, students learned about “development”. They are easily influenced by their mother tongue and say “* is developing more and more.” “Development” is not a stative verb, so it is not appropriate to say “* is very developed”. It is better to let students practice “developing better and better”.

4. Adverb "ÿ"

(1) In this lesson, it indicates a small quantity or a short time. (2) The usage of "ÿ" is quite numerous and complex. When teaching this lesson, the teacher should only teach the meaning and usage of "ÿ" in this lesson. The usage in this lesson is equivalent to "ÿ". (3) "ÿ" related to time, such as "He only came at nine o'clock", "He only came back from abroad", "Why do you have to go back so soon?", etc., do not have the meaning of "ÿ" in this lesson. It is recommended not to mix them together in the teaching.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. Haven't seen you in a while. What have you been up to? 2. I went to Europe on a business trip and took the opportunity to visit some relatives. 3. My company sent me to discuss a collaboration with a trading company. 4. The talks between our two companies went very smoothly, and we've reached an agreement.

5. I communicated with them in English.

6. It only took me a little over two hours to get from Germany to my aunt's house by train.

7. Transportation is very convenient in major European cities.

8. If I ever have the chance to travel to Europe in the future, I will definitely ask you for advice first.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher, acting as Wang Mingwen and Zhang Jia'an, recites sentences from the text. Students then listen to the main idea of the lesson. The teacher can demonstrate new vocabulary or key sentences while reciting.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into four parts, each with independent dialogue and including important vocabulary and grammar points. This is to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part. When teaching, the teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. Through this dialogue, students understand the meaning and can also pronounce the sentences. Then, use other questions to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

Machine Translated by Google

4. This lesson is divided into four parts.

Part One Text

Wang Mingwen: Jia'an, it's been a long time since I've seen you. What have you been busy with lately?

Zhang Jia'an: I went to Europe on a business trip and took the opportunity to visit some relatives.

(1) This section of the text focuses on expressions for greeting others when meeting them. We have already learned "long time no see," and this lesson will introduce "good..." "It's been so long since I've seen you, you..."

(2) Display the sentence from the text: "A: It's been a long time since I've seen you. What have you been busy with lately? B: I…" Let students ask each other questions in pairs and answer freely. (3) If a student is actually on a business trip, ask, "Did you take a trip while you were there? Where did you go? Did you explore the sights?"

Part Two Texts

Wang Mingwen: Which countries did you visit?

Zhang Jiaan: I went to Germany first. My company sent me to discuss cooperation with a trading company.

Wang Mingwen: How did your talks go?

Zhang Jia'an: The talks went very smoothly. Our two companies have reached an agreement and decided on how to cooperate in the future.

Wang Mingwen: I hope your company will continue to thrive.

Zhang Jiaan: Our company's boss hopes to invest in Germany and open a branch office in the future.

Wang Mingwen: Can you speak German?

Zhang Jia'an: No, I only understand a few words. I communicate with them in English.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is on the work-related aspects, and students should practice "talking about cooperation with other companies and how well they can get things done". It went very smoothly; we reached an agreement on how to cooperate and invest in other countries.

(2) The teacher uses several questions to guide the discussion of the key topics in this section, such as "Where does your company send you on a business trip? When you go on the business trip, do the negotiations with other companies go smoothly? Have you reached an agreement? Why didn't you reach an agreement? How will you cooperate in the future? Does your company have any plans to open a branch office/invest in the future?" Students are asked to express their opinions freely.

(3) If the student's experience is not about "cooperating with others" but about "negotiating sales/business deals," then the discussion can also take place. Ask the student to explain how they negotiate sales deals with the other party. What else do they need to discuss besides price? How easy or difficult is it to close a deal?

(4) The last two sentences mention "Can you speak German?", and the teacher can then practice "Can you speak...? If you can't speak..., how do you communicate with them?" and have students respond "I can't speak..., I use... to communicate with...". The teacher can also extend the question, "If the other person doesn't speak English either, how do you communicate with them?" and see how the students answer. Phrases like "use actions..., use body language" can be added.

Machine Translated by Google

Part Three Texts

Wang Mingwen: After you finish your work, where do you go to visit your relatives?

Zhang Jiaan: I went to France to visit my aunt. I hadn't seen her and my cousin for more than two years.

Wang Mingwen: Is your aunt's place far from Germany?

Zhang Jia'an: It's not far. I took the train from Germany to my aunt's house, and it only took a little over two hours.

Wang Mingwen: I heard that transportation in major European cities is very convenient, and it is easy to take the subway or bus.

Zhang Jia'an: Yes! You can travel from one country to another by train.

(1) The teaching focus of this text is on transportation in Europe. The teacher shows the common means of transportation in pictures or writes them on the PPT. Practice "What do you take to work? When you went to Germany, did you take the train/metro? How did you get to the seaside for your vacation?" and so on. (2) Review the learned sentences: “Is A far from B?” with “Not far, only… (time)”. If the two places are far apart, "ÿ" cannot be used. Then, with the actual situation of the students, ask "How long does it take to take the subway to work? How long does it take to drive to work?" to practice "talent".

(3) Choose a city or country and talk about the traffic situation there. Let students express themselves freely.

Part Four Texts

Wang Mingwen: I am interested in European culture. If I have the opportunity to travel to Europe in the future, I will definitely ask you for advice first.

Zhang Jia'an: No problem, I'll introduce you to some fun places.

(1) The focus of this lesson is to express one's own interests, and then practice the usage of "ask for advice". (2) Review the sentence "I am interested in..." and talk about "which culture are you interested in? What is special about that culture? When did you start to be interested in that culture?" You can also let students express their interest in the culture of their foreign classmates.

(3) Ask students, "If you wanted to know about a country's culture and customs, who would you ask?" To understand the situation in Taiwan, who would you consult? And why?

Teaching process for each part of the text: (1) Display sentences and mark key vocabulary and grammar. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar.

(3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook.

(4) Use the materials you have already learned to do extended exercises. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson and practice using the key sentences in this section by asking questions.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) Why hasn't Wang Mingwen seen Zhang Jia'an for a long time? (2) Where did Zhang Jia'an go on a business trip?

(3) What did Zhang Jiaan go on his business trip to discuss?

Machine Translated by Google

(4) Did Zhang Jia'an's negotiations with the German company go smoothly? (5) What did Jia'an's company agree to with the German company? (6) What does Jia'an's company owner want to do? (7) Will Jia'an's company develop well in the future? Why?

(8) Where did Jia'an go after she finished her work? (9) How far is Aunt Jia'an's home from Germany? How long does it take to get there by train?

(10) Is transportation convenient in major European cities? (11) Who is interested in European culture? (12) If Wang Mingwen were to travel to Europe, who would he ask? ý Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions)

(13) Have you ever been to Europe on a business trip?

(14) Have you ever discussed cooperation with other companies? (15) Can you speak German or French? Can you speak other languages? (16) If you can't speak German or French, can you communicate with Europeans? (17) If you can't speak German or French, do you think it would be convenient to travel to Europe? 6.

Have students practice reading the text in groups, and then have students take turns reading the text individually, and correct their pronunciation.

7. Have students complete narration exercises based on the text, aiming to enable them to retell the key points of the text in a storytelling style.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Integrated Activities 1. Reading and Recognizing the Text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly... Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after recitation, understand the content of the dialogue, and use Chinese characters or spelling. Write out the missing parts. (2) Method: a.

Have students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Write Chinese characters or pinyin, depending on the student's level.

d. If students learn quickly and at a high level, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters they practice writing.

a. Explain the activity format.

b. Have students choose a mode of transportation and then use the provided vocabulary to create a short passage.

c. Have students give oral presentations in class to practice natural expression. d. Students can prepare at home first and present at the next class.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials : Teachers

may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

The company sent Gao Liya to discuss the continuation of their collaboration with a Japanese mobile phone company. Gao Liya spoke a little Japanese, so she communicated with the company's manager in Japanese. The manager was pleased that Gao Liya could speak Japanese, so the discussion went smoothly, and they quickly finalized the future cooperation details. After the meeting, Gao Liya told the Japanese manager that she was very interested in Japanese culture and planned to travel to Japan in the future. The manager welcomed Gao Liya to ask him any questions she might have, and promised to recommend interesting places in Japan to her.

ÿ Teaching Tips:

Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs or the learning environment. If students are unwilling to learn Chinese characters or do not write them well, teachers can first focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing Chinese characters. Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols/Pinyin to practice listening and speaking first, while simultaneously learning Chinese characters, hoping to attract students' interest in writing Chinese characters.

Lesson 8

I did something wrong.

I. Learning Objectives

Topic: Reflection

After completing this lesson, can you use Chinese to: 1. Explain a mistake that occurred at work. 2. Explain the reason for the mistake. 3. Express your inner feelings.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activity 1. Preparation:

Begin by asking, "What mistakes have you made at work?" to introduce the grammar and vocabulary of this lesson. The usage of "ÿ".

2. Then, ask, "How did you feel when you did something wrong?" to elicit words related to emotions such as "angry" and "sad." 3. Depending on the student's level, decide whether to ask, "Why did you do something wrong?" This explanation requires a wider vocabulary; students can also express themselves in their native language.

II. Vocabulary Teaching

1. This lesson contains many new words related to emotions and frustration. Teachers must be careful when teaching and practicing these words to avoid students developing negative associations. Negative emotions.

2. In this lesson, "ÿ" is a verb complement, but it can also be used alone to mean "I made a mistake." The teacher can practice in sections, first taking a misspelled word and asking, "Is this word correct?" "No, if it's wrong, it's 'ÿ'." Then ask, "Where is the mistake? Where is it written wrong?" to guide the teacher to the usage of the complement.

Machine Translated by Google

3. In this lesson, the words "ÿ (mà), ÿ (bèi), ÿ (dùn)" can be practiced together, starting with questions like, "If you write this character wrong, will your teacher scold you?" and "If you make a mistake at work, will your boss scold you?" Then ask, "Have you ever been scolded by your teacher/boss?" changing the subject to introduce the passive voice. Next, ask, "Have you been scolded for a long time? Have you been scolded many times?" to introduce the verbal measure word "ÿ" (dùn), and have students learn to express it as "ÿÿÿÿ" (bèi mà le dùn). 4. In Chinese, measure words are divided into "noun measure words" and "verb measure words." Noun measure words include those students have already learned, such as "ÿÿÿ (yÿ gè), ÿÿÿÿ (bÿi bÿi kÿfÿ), ÿÿÿ (yÿ yÿ yÿ), ÿÿÿÿ (yÿ bÿn hété)," while verb measure words follow the verb and indicate time, frequency, degree, etc., such as "ÿÿÿÿ (chÿ yì cÿ fàn), ÿÿÿ (pÿo yÿ tàng), ÿÿÿ (dÿ yÿ yÿ). Measure words have fixed collocations. This lesson adds the word "ÿ" (dÿ), allowing the teacher to practice with examples like "ÿÿÿ" (dÿ le dùn) and "ÿÿÿ" (bèi dÿ le). 5. The new word "clearly" can be used to describe the situation of the preceding verb. Practice with examples like "When I was diving, I could see the fish in the sea very clearly," "The teacher explained it very clearly," and "The contract was written very clearly." Then practice its use as an adverbial phrase with examples like "clearly see…," "clearly explain…," and "clearly write…." Practice all these different usages. 6. Practice the new words "occur," "problem," and "serious" together. First, use a hypothetical scenario: "If she missed several classes, what problem might have occurred?" and "Do you think the problem is serious?"

Then practice with examples like "When you were working/in your company, did any serious problems occur?" and "Were they resolved (reviewed)? How were they resolved?"

7. This lesson has two seemingly similar new words, "ÿÿ" (shÿfÿng) and "ÿÿ" (fÿxiàn), but their meanings are clearly different. The teacher will give examples of each, such as "This company had a problem" and "This company discovered a problem," to illustrate the situations in which the two sentences are applicable, thus helping students to distinguish the differences.

8. Practice the new vocabulary words "mood," "feeling," "angry," and "sad" together. Begin with the question, "How do you feel after being scolded?" Practice "I was scolded, (I) am angry/sad." Note that students should not answer "I feel very angry/I feel very sad." Then introduce the new vocabulary word "feeling." "Feeling" is a noun in this lesson, so do not practice its verb usage yet. Only practice with the question, "How do you feel after being scolded?" Students can answer "I am very angry/I am very sad." Answering "I feel very angry/I feel very sad" is also correct, but it sounds a bit unnatural. Then end the dialogue with "I know/I understand how you feel."

9. The new word "ÿ" (bié) means to dissuade or prohibit, and it carries this meaning in this lesson. It's generally used when speaking to others. In practice, you need to design dialogues between A and B. For example: "(A sees B has drunk a lot of alcohol) A: Don't drink too much, it's bad for your health." "A: Read the contract carefully, don't write it wrong. B: I'll be careful, I won't write it wrong." Finally, compare the different usages of "ÿÿÿ" (bié xiÿ cuò), "ÿÿÿÿ" (huì huì xiÿ cuò), and "ÿÿ ÿ" (méi xiÿ cuò).

10. In this lesson, "ÿ" is used to mean "to hand in homework" or "to hand in a report," and can also be used to mean "to make friends" depending on the context.

11. The vocabulary word "ÿÿ" has a wide range of uses; the teacher will provide examples for practice as needed. Start by practicing using the aspect of "being afraid of problems/mistakes," such as: "checking contracts," "checking computer files," "checking completed homework," and "checking things to prepare for a business trip."

12. The new word "ÿÿÿ" (yào bù rú) is a conjunction meaning "if not," "otherwise," or "if not." It is used to introduce sentences expressing results or conclusions. (From 800 Chinese Words (Lü Shuxiang)). The teacher provides scenarios to help students understand that "if you don't do this, the outcome might not be what you want." For example: "You should check the files carefully, otherwise you'll make a mistake." "You should eat well, otherwise you won't be healthy." "You have to hurry up and prepare the roast turkey, otherwise it will be too late." "Making a mistake," "being unhealthy," and "being too late" are not situations you want to happen.

Machine Translated by Google

13. The difference between "price" and "money" must be explained. The former is used in formal business contracts or written texts, while the latter is commonly used in spoken language to ask how much something costs.

14. The phrase "once upon a time" is used when describing an event but the date is uncertain. Students can use "once upon a time" when describing or narrating a past event that may have occurred multiple times, indicating one particular instance. For example: "I often travel to Europe on business, and once I took the opportunity to visit my aunt and cousin in France." "I thought oolong tea was very bitter, but once I drank tea brewed by Mingwen, and I found it very delicious."

15. The phrase "ÿÿÿ" (disappeared) doesn't need to be explained in individual Chinese characters; practice them together. For example: "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (My dog is missing), "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (Her cell phone is missing).

III. Grammar Teaching 1. Verb

Complement "Incorrect"

(1) When "ÿ" follows a verb as a complement, it indicates that the result of the action is wrong. As a result complement, "ÿ" only appears in the actual form, such as "ÿÿÿ" (made a mistake) or "ÿÿÿ" (did not make a mistake). It cannot be used in the potential form, such as "ÿÿÿ" (*did something wrong) or "ÿÿÿÿ" (did something well). (2) Teachers use verbs that can be paired with "ÿ" for practice. For example:

"ÿ (do), ÿ (see), ÿ (speak), ÿ (listen), ÿ (write), ÿ (point)," etc.

"Send", etc.

2. being

(1) In passive sentences, “ÿ” introduces the agent of the action (the one who does the action), and the preceding subject is the recipient of the action (the one who receives the action). The following verb can usually indicate the completion or result of the event, such as in textbook example (1). Sometimes the agent following “ÿ” can be omitted, such as in textbook example (2). In the negative case, “ÿ/ÿ” is placed before “ÿ”, and “ÿ” is not added after it, such as in textbook example (3). In daily life, “ÿ” is mostly used for bad or unfortunate events.

(2) Originally, "ÿ" was mostly used for bad or unfortunate events, but currently it is being overused. For example: "He was nominated," "That teacher was liked by most students," etc. Teachers should avoid using it for non-bad situations to avoid confusing students. (3) When translating sentences using "ÿ," sometimes it cannot be equivalent to the English. For example: "*This book was written by Teacher Zhang," Instead, they used the phrase "This book was written by Teacher Zhang".

3. Let

(1) "ÿ" has multiple meanings and varies in different sentences. In this lesson, "ÿ" indicates how an event or situation evokes a feeling or brings about a result. (2) "ÿ" also means "not allowed," such as: Mom doesn't allow her to go out and play. This has not yet appeared in this lesson.

It would be better for the teacher not to teach for the time being.

(3) "Let" is used frequently, and teachers can provide many scenarios for students to practice. You can prepare state verbs related to emotions to practice first. For example: "XXX makes him happy, XX makes him uncomfortable, makes him happy, makes him like it very much, makes him angry, makes him sad", etc.

Machine Translated by Google

(4) Prepare some more scenarios, in which "Let" is followed by other situations. For example: "Seeing photos of the beach makes me want to go on vacation." or "This year's Thanksgiving was so much fun that I want to invite my friends to celebrate with me again."

4. Preposition “ÿ” (1) “ÿ” followed by a noun indicates what tool or method the verb following the noun uses to carry out the action.

This action.

(2) The word "use" was already learned in Lesson 7, and it is presented here as a grammar exercise. The teacher provides various scenarios and pictures.

Let's practice.

(3) In Taiwan, the word "ÿ" is sometimes overused, such as in the sentences: "ÿI don't know how to do this, can you help me use it?" and "ÿI poured water into the computer and broke the company's computer." These two sentences should use "ÿ". Teachers do not need to teach "ÿ" here, but only need to explain that the two incorrect sentences do not meet the condition of "using tools or methods".

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. I got yelled at by my manager.

2. What happened to you? 3. I didn't read the information carefully and wrote down the wrong price on the contract.

4. Is the problem serious?

5. He was very angry, so he scolded me. 6. I understand how you feel; doing something wrong must have made you very uncomfortable.

7. Don't be sad. I've been there too.

8. I discovered that the files stored on my computer are missing.

9. I must check it several more times now, otherwise I might lose my job.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher, acting as Du Xiang and Zhang Jia'an, recites sentences from the text. Students then listen to the main idea of the lesson. The teacher can demonstrate new vocabulary or key sentences while reciting.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with independent dialogue and including important vocabulary and grammar. This is to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part initially. When teaching, the teacher should first present the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. Through this part...

Machine Translated by Google

The dialogue helps students understand the meaning and also allows them to pronounce the sentences. Then, other questions are used to allow students to practice these key sentences repeatedly.

4. This lesson is divided into three parts.

Part One Text

Du Xiang: Jia'an, what's wrong? You seem to be in a bad mood. Zhang Jia'an: I got yelled at by my manager at work yesterday.

Du Xiang: What happened?

Zhang Jia'an: Sigh! I didn't read the information carefully yesterday and wrote down the wrong price on the contract.

Du Xiang: Is the problem serious?

Zhang Jiaan: Luckily, when I showed it to the manager, he noticed that I had added an extra zero.

Du Xiang: Wow! Is he angry?

Zhang Jiaan: He was very angry, so he scolded me.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: when meeting someone, asking what happened by observing their expression, such as "What's wrong? You don't seem to be in a good mood." or "What happened?" This is also a form of greeting and inquiry in language. Chinese people have a habit of asking questions by "reading their faces" when meeting them, which shows concern and is not because they like to pry into other people's privacy. Teachers can explain this Chinese custom to avoid students getting the impression that Chinese people are impolite or talk too much with someone they don't know well.

(2) Present the sentence: "What happened?", providing the context: "He missed several classes / I heard he was sick / I heard he lost his job...", and then guide students to say the sentence by asking, "Do you know what happened?" To avoid being specific, the teacher should practice using hypothetical characters. Then, further discuss by asking, "Is the problem serious? / Is the situation serious?" Imagine what would happen to a normal person in this situation and talk about possible scenarios.

(3) Ask students, "What problems have you encountered at work? How serious were they?" and let them explain what happened to them. (4) Ask students, "When this problem happened, was your manager/boss angry? What did he say? What did he do?" to continue the previous topic and practice "The boss was very angry, I was scolded, I was...".

Part Two Texts

(Zhang Jia'an: He was very angry, so he scolded me.)

Du Xiang: I understand how you feel. Making a mistake must have made you very uncomfortable.

Zhang Jiaan: Yes! It's quite upsetting. If I had been more careful, this problem wouldn't have happened.

Du Xiang: Don't be sad. I've had that experience too.

Zhang Jia'an: What did you do wrong? Du Xiang: Once, my boss asked me to translate some documents. When I was about to hand them in, I discovered that the file on the computer was missing. I didn't have time to make a new copy, and my boss scolded me.

Machine Translated by Google

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: to express understanding of others' feelings, and to provide appropriate advice based on one's own experience. It was a comfort.

(2) "I understand how you feel, XX will definitely make you..." This is often used to comfort others after they have encountered something bad. The scenarios provided by the teacher should be appropriate, and should be within the scope of "work not going well, making a mistake" to avoid touching on privacy.

(3) Use the problem that happened to Du Xiang to guide students to discuss "Have you ever encountered the same situation? Is it common for files to be missing/not found?" Then ask "Have you ever encountered any other more serious problems at work?" The teacher asks students to explain the process themselves. The situation is complicated, so attention should be paid to the correctness of the students' grammar when they express themselves.

| Zhang Jiaan: Nowadays, everyone uses computers for work. Although it is very convenient, problems can easily occur.Du Xiang: Now, before I give the documents to my boss, I always check them several times, otherwise I might lose the job. Zhang Jia'an: Yes, you have to look at every document very clearly and check it carefully. |

(1) The key point of this lesson: Although computers are convenient, they also have problems. (2) Discuss the advantages and disadvantages of using computers for work, and let students talk about it based on their own work. Many unfamiliar terms may appear (hacking, easy to steal, etc.), and the teacher can supplement them as needed.

(3) Guide students to discuss by asking, "How can we avoid making mistakes and causing problems when we are working?" Include phrases like "look carefully," "check several times," "check thoroughly," and "be careful."

(4) Ask students to discuss "Will job opportunities decrease for the average person in the future? Will computers cause people to lose their jobs?" and predict future trends. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points.

(2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar.

(3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar, and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook.

(4) Use previously learned materials for extended exercises. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson and practice using key sentences from this section through information-based questions.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of questions: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check students' understanding) (1) Why is Zhang Jia'an in a bad mood? (2) What happened to her? (3) How serious is the problem that happened to Zhang Jia'an? (4) What did Zhang Jia'an's manager say when he saw that the contract was written incorrectly? (5) How did Zhang Jia'an feel after being scolded?

(6) Why does Du Xiang understand Zhang Jia'an's feelings?

Machine Translated by Google

(7) What did Du Xiang do wrong? (8) Zhang Jiaan said that everyone should use computers to do things, right? (9) Du Xiang said how one should work? (10) What would happen if Du Xiang was not careful at work?

ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information-based questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions)

(11) Have you ever encountered any problems while working?

(12) Is the problem you encountered very serious? (13) Have you ever been scolded by your boss? What was the reason for the scolding? (14) Does your boss like to scold people? Do you get angry? (15) If your boss often scolds people, would you like to change jobs? (16) If a serious problem occurs at your job, what will your company do?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have

students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method: a. Have students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Writing Chinese characters or pinyin can be arranged according to the students' level.

d. If students learn quickly and at a high level, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters they practice writing.

3. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and new words learned in this lesson fluently.

Machine Translated by Google

(2) Method: a.

Explain the activity method and remind students of the sentences to be used.

b. Have students ask each other questions, and record each other's answers as they ask.

c. The teacher asked a student to report to the class what happened to the student he had visited.

d. The teacher may also select two students to complete the dialogue in front of the whole class.

4. Expression Practice

(1) Objective: To train students to write a short essay based on the interview in the previous question and then give an oral report.

(2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format.

b. Have students complete the entire short passage at home, using a computer for typing. c. Ask students to give an oral presentation in the next class. Ideally, they should be able to present without a script to train their natural expression.

5. Expression Practice

(1) Objective: To train students' organizational skills. (2)

Method:

a. Ask students to choose a scenario. b. Then, using the vocabulary provided in the textbook, organize a short passage and present it in a storytelling (narrative) style.

Let me explain this to you.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials : Teachers

may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Zhang Jia'an was a very diligent and careful worker, and her manager trusted her implicitly. Once, she misread the price on a contract, omitting a zero, and wrote it down incorrectly. Her manager was furious because the price was significantly lower. Fortunately, the contract hadn't been given to the cooperating company yet, so no serious problems arose. However, the mistake still made Zhang Jia'an quite upset. She knew she needed to double-check her work more often in the future, otherwise she might lose her job.

question:

( 1. Zhang Jia'an is both meticulous and careful in his work. 2.

( Zhang Jia'an added an extra zero to the contract. 3. Zhang Jia'an wrote the ( wrong price, which caused a serious problem. 4. This mistake will make Zhang Jia'an more careful

( in the future.

ÿ Teaching Tips: Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs or the learning environment. If students are unwilling to learn Chinese characters or do not write them well, teachers can first focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing Chinese characters. Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols/Pinyin to practice listening and speaking first, while simultaneously learning Chinese characters, hoping to attract students' interest in writing Chinese characters.

Lesson 9

Weekend activities

I. Learning Objectives

Topic: Organizing Life

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Describe your typical weekend routine. 2. Describe the household chores you usually do on weekends. 3. Explain how you plan your weekend activities.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. The teacher prepares pictures of activities that locals often do on weekends, and reviews previously learned vocabulary, such as: running, walking, swimming, watching TV, playing games, diving, going to an amusement park, cooking, going to the supermarket, shopping at a department store, etc. Pictures of tidying up the home environment should also be included to align with the theme of this lesson.

2. Start by asking, "What do you usually do on weekends?" and let students freely share what they usually do on weekends.

3. If students don't mention tidying up their environment or cleaning their rooms, the teacher should deliberately guide the conversation towards these topics to bring up some of them.

New vocabulary.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. The vocabulary and grammar in this lesson mainly focus on directional complements such as "come down, go up, come in, go out, come over, go back..." Therefore, these types of vocabulary should be practiced together with Grammar 1 and Grammar 2.

2. Other vocabulary words are grouped together by household chores and activities for practice. For example, words related to tidying up the home environment such as "tidy up," "clean," "move the lawn," "wipe," "take," "put away," "trash," "study," "table," "chair," and "drawing." The teacher uses TPR (Total Physical Response) with pictures to help students practice describing images and actions. For example, the teacher demonstrates "wiping."

Machine Translated by Google

Have students say actions such as "table and chair", "take the picture down (from the wall)", "go out (in the classroom) and "go in (the classroom)".

3. Another set of vocabulary words in this lesson is "barbecue, mountain climbing, baseball." Add these words to the activities you have already learned. Let's practice together.

4. The new word "approximately" is an adverb, and it's easiest to understand when followed by a quantity, such as: "approximately + how much time," "approximately + how much money," "approximately + a few people," etc. The teacher can use examples like, "How long does it take you to drive to work every day? How much money do you spend each time you buy clothes? How many business trips do you go on in a year? How long does it take to roast a turkey?" 5. The new words "climbing a mountain," "going up a mountain," and "going down a mountain" can be explained. "Climbing a mountain" refers to the entire activity; "going up a mountain," "going down a mountain," etc., all contribute to the overall meaning. "Going down the mountain" refers to going up or down a mountain.

6. The word "arrange" can be used in work, activities, and daily life. Teachers can ask, "How do you usually arrange your weekends?", "If you have to travel for work, how do you arrange your child's time?", or "Do you consider yourself a good time manager?" 7. The word "competition" is mostly used in the context of sports. Teachers can ask, "Do you like watching football/basketball/baseball games?" to elicit students' interests. Note: When discussing competition between companies or between students, use "competition" instead of "competition." Consider adding more information depending on the students' level.

III. Grammar Teaching 1.

Directional verbs + come/go

(1) The meanings of "ÿ" and "ÿ" in this lesson are not the same as those learned before in "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ" or "ÿÿÿÿÿ". In this lesson, "ÿ" and "ÿ" represent the action of the subject "moving towards the speaker or towards the foothold" or "moving away from the speaker or in the opposite direction of the foothold". Different directional verbs are added before "ÿ" and "ÿ" to form directional complements, indicating the direction of the action result. (2) Although this grammar is easy to understand, it is not easy to use correctly and naturally, and requires a lot of practice. It is best to practice with TPR (Total Physical Response Method). The teacher demonstrates with actions, and the students follow along while saying and doing the actions. After mastering the directions of "ÿ" and "ÿ", the second grammar point is added. Note that the direction of "ÿ" and "ÿ" is related to the speaker, so the teacher asks the students to take turns being the one giving the action instructions, which makes it easier to develop directionality.

(3) Practice the actions by saying to the students, such as "Please come in," "Please go out," "Please go up (assuming there are stairs)," "Please go over," etc. (4) To make the teaching actions simple and clear, "ÿ" (qi) is not taught in this lesson because "ÿ" can only be paired with "ÿÿ" (qi lai), not "ÿÿÿ" (qi qu). All other verbs can be paired with "ÿ" (lai) and "ÿ" (qu), and the teacher can practice them according to the six verbs in the book.

Machine Translated by Google

2. Action verb + directional verb + come/go

(1) "Directional verb + come/go" is a directional complement that indicates direction. It can be preceded by an action verb that indicates what action the actor did, and then the directional complement shows which direction the result of the action is in. For example, the textbook example (1).

(2) Note: If there is a place noun after the action, the place noun should be placed between the "directional verb" and "come/go", as in textbook example (2). Here, you cannot say "*take it back home". (3) On the basis of grammar one, add verb practice "V + DV + come/go". Note that although the verbs you have learned can be matched with each "DV + come/go", there may be low frequency of use or impracticality. Therefore, the teacher needs to select appropriate situations for practice. For example, "walk, run, take, move, bring" can be matched with "DV + come/go" phrases more often. The teacher can practice with "please come over", "please run out", "please take it down", "please move it in", "please bring it back", etc.

(4) The use of "crawling" is limited. Although we can say "crawling over" or "crawling back," the context is not everyday. Teachers need to provide appropriate contexts, such as: "Children crawling over" is fine, but inappropriate for adults. "Crawling in" or "crawling out" should only be said in special situations. Teachers can explain but do not practice the actions. "Drive" refers to driving a car, and its use is also limited. It is necessary to clearly explain when "drive over" or "drive back" can be used.

3. Topic Sentences (1) In Chinese, if you want to emphasize, explain, or evaluate a person or event, you can move that person or event to the beginning of the sentence (sentence start) to become the "topic" of the sentence. What follows the topic is the evaluation, explanation, etc. If the person or event in the topic is multiple, you need to use "ÿ" (all) to complete it. For example, the textbook example sentence (3).

(2) This textbook has taught many sentences that can be changed into topic sentences, and some of them are more suitable to be presented as topic sentences. Teachers can use sentences they have learned to illustrate. For example: "You misspelled this word. ÿ You misspelled this word." "A: Do you understand German? B: I only understand a few sentences of German." If the response is "German, I only understand a few sentences," it can more clearly express the speaker's meaning, and sometimes it is more natural and closer to the way native speakers say it.

4. "Ba" sentence: ba + O + V + DV + come/go (1) "Ba" means to dispose, indicating that a subject does something and then the object changes position and produces different results. For example, in textbook example (1). "Ba" cannot be directly matched with a specific English word, and the usage of "Ba" sentence is very broad. In this lesson, we will first learn "ba + O + V + DV + come/go". (2) The object of the "Ba" sentence must be a specific thing that is known. It cannot refer to all things in general. For example, in textbook example (2), we know that "painting" refers to "those paintings" on the wall in the living room. If we say "* Mom took down a painting and wiped it," we do not know "which painting," so the sentence is incorrect. (3) If the sentence is negative, "mei," "bu," and "bie" should be placed before "ba". For example, in textbook example (3).

Machine Translated by Google

(4) This lesson includes practice of using "ba" sentences with both Grammar 1 and Grammar 2. The teacher first states that there are no sentences without "ba," then explains that when "ba" is used, its purpose is to indicate a change after an action, emphasizing the action of handling something. In fact, directional complements with "ba" sentences are the most frequently used.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. Please come down, I have something to tell you.

2. I'm organizing some documents, come upstairs.

3. We need to clean the house, let's have them help. 4. I can take down those paintings and photos and clean them properly. 5. They can help take the barbecue equipment outside.

6. We climbed up, and then slowly walked down.

7. This arrangement will make them very happy.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher, acting as Gao Liya and He Xi, recites sentences from the text. Students listen to the main idea of the lesson first. The teacher can demonstrate new vocabulary or key sentences while reciting.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with independent dialogue and including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter at once, focusing on a few sentences in each part. During the lesson, the teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, use other questions to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. This lesson is divided into three parts.

|---|
| Gao Liya: I'm back. He Xi, where are you? |
| He Xi: I'm in the study upstairs. Gao Liya: |
| Please come down, I have something to tell you. He Xi: I'm |
| organizing some documents, please come up. |

(1) The teaching focus of this section is on the directional complements "come down" and "come up". (2) Show the sentences: "Please come up" and "Please come down", and the teacher uses illustrations to explain the differences. Then, use the content of Grammar 1 to let students understand and practice these directional complements. Refer to the teaching suggestions for Grammar 1.

Machine Translated by Google

(3) "I have something to tell you" is a sentence that is frequently used in daily life. Have students form groups randomly, and then imagine something they want to say to each other, starting with "XX, I have something to tell you" to practice the dialogue.

Part Two Texts

(Golia walks upstairs)

Gao Liya: My sister said she's going to New York on a business trip next week and there's no one to help her take care of her child, so she'd like to ask us to look after her.

He Xi: The kids come to our house on weekends, right?

Gao Liya: Yes. Does their presence bother you? He Xi: No. But we clean the house every weekend, so we'll have them help out. Gao Liya: No problem, Frank usually likes to help his dad mow the lawn. With Nicole's help, those paintings and...

Then I can take the photo down and clean it properly.

He Xi: We've finished cleaning, shall we have a barbecue in the yard? Gao Liya: The children will definitely love a barbecue, they can help take the barbecue equipment outside.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is on vocabulary and activities related to tidying up the environment and cleaning the house. (2) The sentence "No one helps her take care of the child, so she wants to ask us to take care of him." can be used to practice other situations. Use the sentence pattern "No one helps him/no time..., so he wants to ask (someone)..." to describe things. For example: "His wife is away on a business trip, and no one helps him cook, so he wants to ask a friend to buy him dinner." "He has been very busy lately and has no time to take the dog for a walk, so he wants to ask someone to do this for him."

(3) Show the sentence "Those paintings and photos, I can take them down and wipe them properly." This is a practice of the topic sentence of grammar three. First practice "I wipe those paintings and photos properly," then practice "Those paintings and photos, I wipe them properly." Then add directional complement practice. "Those paintings and photos, I take them down (from the wall) and wipe them properly." Practice in stages so that students can easily understand the grammar and how to use it. Finally, practice with different objects such as "Those tables and chairs, I move them out and wipe them properly." (4) Discuss the topic "barbecue" and ask students, "When do you barbecue? Do you like to barbecue in the yard? What do you prepare when you barbecue? Do you invite friends or colleagues to your house for barbecue?" Add food names or related vocabulary as needed. (5)

Practice the "ba" sentence of grammar four, "They can help take the barbecue things out." The teacher prepares pictures of food related to barbecue, as well as pictures of houses and yards. Imagine Gao Liya is speaking to He Xi in the yard. Use the phrase "Please take XX out," and have the students listen while moving the food from inside the house to the picture of the yard. Then imagine He Xi is speaking to Gao Liya from inside the house, and use the phrase "Please take XX out," having the students move the food from inside the house to the picture of the yard. Repeat this sentence substitution exercise.

Part Three Texts

He Xi: It's a bit boring staying home all weekend, let's take them out to play on Sunday! Gao Liya: Okay!

Let's go to the nearby hill in the morning. We'll climb up, enjoy the scenery, and then slowly walk down; it'll take about two hours.

Machine Translated by Google

He Xi: It seems there's a baseball game in the community next weekend. After we come down the mountain, we'll take them to watch the game.

Gao Liya: Okay, Frank really loves playing baseball.

He hope: I think our arrangement will make them very happy.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is outdoor activities near home. (2) Show the sentence: "We climbed up and then slowly walked down." Show a picture of a small hill, and then practice grammar two: "climb up/run up, walk down/run down".

(3) The teacher used multiple pictures to practice grammar 2, such as: matching the action verbs "walk, run, take, carry" with "inside the house/outside the house, in front of the school/behind the school, upstairs/downstairs" and so on. (4) The teacher used "What kind of game did He Xi and his family take their children to watch?" to lead to "Does your community often have sports games on weekends? What kinds of games are there? Do you prefer to watch games at home or go to the stadium to watch games?" to let students talk about the activities in their community and the details of these activities.

Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points.

(2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar.

(3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar, and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook.

(4) Use previously learned materials for extended exercises. (5)

Integrate the content of this lesson and practice using key sentences from this section through information-based questions.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example Questions: (Teaching questions, based on textbook content, to check students' understanding) (1) Where was He Xi when Gao Liya came home? (2) Why didn't He Xi want to go downstairs? (3) Did He Xi ask Gao Liya to come down or go up? (4) What did Gao Liya talk about with He Xi? (5) Was He Xi willing to help take care of the children? (6) What do He Xi and his family usually do at home on weekends? (7) What did He Xi ask the children to help with? (8) Did Gao Liya say the children would be willing to help clean the house? (9) What did Gao Liya say Nicole could help her with?

(10) What can Frank help with?

(11) After cleaning the house, what did He Xi say he was going to do? (12) Where was He Xi going to take the children on Sunday? (13) What would they do after going down the mountain? (14) What were He Xi and Gao Liya's plans? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions)

(15) Do you clean the house and tidy up the yard on weekends?

Machine Translated by Google

(16) Do you like cleaning the house and tidying the yard? (17) If you don't like cleaning the house, would you hire someone to do it for you? (18) Do you barbecue in the yard? Do you barbecue often? (19) What activities do you usually do on weekends?

(20) Do you like watching baseball games? Why? (21) What is your favorite game?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method: a. Have

students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Writing Chinese characters or pinyin can be arranged according to the students' level. d. If students learn quickly and at a high level, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters they practice writing.

3. I heard about the interactive activities.

In pairs, please ask each other about the house cleaning situation using the questions below.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity method and remind students of the sentences to be used. b. Have students ask each other questions, and complete the sentences while asking questions.

c. The teacher asked students to report to the class the opinions of the students he had interviewed.

d. The teacher may also select two students to complete the dialogue in front of the whole class.

4. Expression Practice

Please plan a weekend activity for your family and tell everyone the details of the activity. You can use the following pictures and sentences to help you explain.

(1) Objective: To train students to write short essays based on their own ideas and then report them orally. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format.

b. Have students complete the entire short passage at home based on their own understanding; they can use a computer to type it. c. Ask students to give an oral presentation in the next class. Ideally, they should be able to present without a script to train their natural expression.

5. Reading authentic materials

(1) Objective: To train students' reading ability. (2) Method:

a. Ask students to look at the pictures, and the teacher can ask them what information they see.

b. Then, ask students to answer the questions in the textbook. They only need to identify the keywords; they don't need to understand all the information in the pictures. This trains students' ability to scan while reading.

c. The teacher may supplement with words such as "guide dog" and "no entry" as needed.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials : Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Gao Liya and He Xi are usually very busy, and only have time to clean the house on weekends. On Saturday mornings, they clean the living room and tidy the study together. After cleaning the living room and study, Gao Liya cleans the kitchen, and He Xi takes out the trash. On Sundays, Gao Liya and He Xi like to go for a walk in the nearby hills. The scenery on the hills makes them forget all the hard work they've done. After coming down the hill, they go to the supermarket to buy groceries, and then go home to prepare dinner. Eating dinner and chatting makes them feel relaxed and happy.

question:

1. Gao Liya tidies up the study and living room herself. 2. Taking out ( ( the trash is He Xi's job. 3. Gao Liya and He Xi like to go hiking on ( weekends. 4. On Sundays, Gao Liya goes grocery shopping, and He Xi ( cooks dinner.

ÿ Teaching Reminders:

Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs or the learning environment. If students are unwilling to learn Chinese characters or have difficulty writing them, the teacher can first focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing characters. Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols.

Machine Translated by Google

The course begins with practicing listening and speaking using Pinyin, while simultaneously introducing Chinese characters to students, hoping to spark their interest in writing them.

Lesson 10

My Chinese has improved.

I. Learning Objectives

Topic: Learning a Language

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Explain the different aspects of foreign language learning;

2. Review problems encountered in your learning; 3. Describe your progress.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. This is the last lesson of Book 3, essentially a semester summary. The teacher presents Chinese characters (or word cards) on a PowerPoint presentation, using skills such as "listening, speaking, writing, and recognizing (reading)" to guide the lesson's focus. 2. This can be correlated with the four skills of "listening, speaking, reading, and writing." Given that students find it difficult/unwilling to write Chinese characters by hand, "writing Chinese characters" will represent "writing," and "being able to recognize Chinese characters" will represent "reading."

3. The teacher begins by asking, "Do you feel your Chinese has improved?" and asks students to talk about what aspects they have improved in. Students are encouraged to say things like, "I feel my speaking/writing... is better." More appropriate vocabulary can be introduced when teaching the text.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. This lesson begins with new words related to learning, such as "progress," "fluency," "listening," and "writing (review)." The teacher asks questions like, "Do you feel your Chinese has improved? Do you feel your Chinese is more fluent? Do you feel your listening comprehension is better than before? Have you learned more characters? Do you know more characters?" to encourage students to share their progress, which also serves as a reflection at the end of the semester.

Machine Translated by Google

2. "Listening comprehension" refers to the ability to understand what others are saying. Besides listening comprehension, there is no "speaking comprehension" or "writing comprehension." It requires the use of "speaking ability, writing ability, and reading ability," etc. 3. There is another group of vocabulary related to learning, including "study," "exam," "exam paper," "homework," "grades," and "diligent." The teacher might ask questions like, "Do you like exams? What are the benefits of exams? Why don't you like exams? Do you like doing homework? Do you find doing homework tiring? Are grades important to you? Do you consider yourself a diligent student? Which classmate do you think is the most diligent? Is it necessary to take exams to learn a language?" These questions all relate to classroom learning, and students should be able to perform well. 4. "Diligent" can only be used in the context of learning, not work. Therefore, "*He works very diligently/*She works diligently" is an incorrect sentence. "Effort" has a wider range of uses, such as: "She works very hard, and the boss likes her very much," and "He studies Chinese diligently so he can work in Taiwan in the future."

5. The vocabulary word "ÿÿ" (shuÿjié, end) can be practiced together with "ÿÿ" (shÿkÿi, start). The teacher introduces the vocabulary by asking, "When did this semester begin? When did it end?" "ÿÿ" is used when something has lasted a longer period, such as, "She was negotiating a collaboration with that company, and as soon as the work was finished, she immediately went back to the hotel to rest." This indicates that the negotiation was not easy and required a bit more time. You can also practice phrases like, "The baseball game is over," and "The week's vacation is over."

6. The pronunciation of "ÿ" in this lesson is "huán," and its meaning differs from the previous "ÿhái." The teacher will first review "ÿÿÿ" (to hand in materials) and "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (to hand in the contract to the boss), and then guide the lesson to "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (students handed in their homework) and "ÿÿÿÿ ÿÿ" (students handed in their exam papers), and "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (students handed in their homework to the teacher) and "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (students handed in their exam papers to the teacher). Since "ÿÿ" means "to hand in," it is necessary to "ÿ" (to return), as in "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (the teacher returned the exam papers to the students) and "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (the teacher returned the homework to the students). Practicing "ÿ" and "ÿ" together is more effective. 7. The new word "ÿÿ" (carefully) is mostly used to describe doing things carefully, diligently, clearly, and attentively to avoid mistakes or problems. Both "ÿÿ" and "ÿÿ" (carefully) can be used in certain sentences, such as "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (carefully check the contract) and "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (carefully check the contract). However, "ÿÿ" can be used in sentences like "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (drive carefully) and "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (drive carefully), but "ÿÿ" cannot be used in these contexts. 8. The new word "ÿÿ" (tone) should be repeatedly mentioned by the teacher during the learning process. This lesson requires recognizing Chinese characters, and the teacher should also practice using the correctness of tones. The teacher first asks students to pronounce a single word (the teacher can add the vocabulary), then says, "That's right, the pronunciation is right," and then leads to "The pronunciation is very correct," "The tone is correct." There's a difference between "correct" and "right." "Correct" can be used as an attributive, such as, "The correct tone made it very clear to me," or "The correct way to write this word is...". When students are starting from scratch or are just beginning to learn, the teacher might use incomplete sentences to express their meaning, saying things like, "This is the correct way to do it," or "This is the correct way to write it." In this lesson, the teacher should emphasize using "correct" instead of "right."

9. When using "agree," students often make the mistake of saying "*I agree with him," or "*I agree with him." Students must understand that they cannot translate the English literally. They should use phrases like "A: What do you think of his opinion?" "B: I agree." or "B: I agree with his opinion."

10. This lesson teaches "ideas." Teachers are encouraged to use "What are your thoughts? / What are your thoughts on working abroad?" instead of "What do you think about working abroad?" during practice. Students should use "My thought is..." instead of "I feel...". Using "My thought is..." can enhance students' ability to express their opinions and thoughts, rather than just a feeling.

11. Practice using the word "suitable" in the sentence structure of this lesson. For example, use "Taiwan is a suitable place to learn Chinese" to illustrate the structure "A (place, situation) is suitable for… (doing something)". For instance: "The seaside is suitable for a vacation…"

Machine Translated by Google

The phrase "Parks are suitable for jogging, and walking is suitable for the elderly" can be extended to: "Mexico is a suitable place for winter vacations," "Parks are suitable places for jogging," and "Walking is a suitable exercise for the elderly." "Suitable" and "appropriate" are not entirely the same; teachers should not introduce "appropriate" first to avoid confusion. 12.

The phrase "that's right" is used in response to someone's words to mean "yes" or "agree," and can be expressed as "You're right." 13. The supplementary vocabulary word "ÿ" is to provide practice with the "ÿ" construction. This lesson only uses the usage of "ÿÿ+ÿÿÿÿ". Whether to supplement other usages, such as "ÿÿÿÿÿ/ÿÿ" (put it down/put it in), depends on the students' level.

III. Grammar Teaching 1. S + give

+ O + V give / V to / V in

(1) The "ba" sentence in this lesson is used in conjunction with the previously learned "V give / V to / V at". Without "ba", the sentence describes a fact or state, as in textbook example (1). If "ba" is added, it emphasizes the subject's "dispose" of the thing. The result of the action disposing of the thing is often that the thing (object) changes position. For example, textbook examples (2)(3)(4). (2) The best way to practice this grammar rule is to first use the topic sentence and then add "ba" to practice. Please refer to the exercise sentence format in the grammar section of the textbook. Using "real pictures" plus "action verbs" is the most concrete and easy-to-understand way to practice. For example, "oolong tea, coffee, pumpkin pie, contract, data, gift..." are paired with verbs such as "take, put, send, bring, move, sell..." etc.

2. I don't know

(1) "I don't know" expresses a question and is a more tactful way of asking a question. Sometimes it means that you hope the other person will answer, and sometimes you don't expect the other person to answer. The subject "I" before "I don't know" is often omitted. See example sentence (1) in the textbook.

(2) Note: When using this expression, the following sentence must be expressed in two forms: one is in the form of A+not+A, as in textbook example (2). The other is in the form of interrogative words (how, how V), as in textbook example (3).

(3) Students often translate this statement directly into their native language, resulting in grammatically incorrect sentences such as "*I don't know if...". Teachers should emphasize the characteristic that Chinese and English cannot be directly translated. Then, teachers should ask students a large number of questions to respond to "I don't know... (How is Taiwan/Does he speak well/Is he hardworking/Are Taiwanese people friendly/Are Taiwanese people friendly)", etc.

3. Adverb is more

(1) The adverb “ÿ” is used to indicate an increase in degree. It is often used in comparative sentences, implying that the original thing has a certain degree, and the sentence using “ÿ” is of a higher degree than the implied degree.

(2) "ÿ" is often used with "ÿ". Therefore, when teachers compare two things that may both be good or both are bad, they will say that one of them is "good" or "bad", and then guide the conversation to the other one being "better" or "worse". For example: "It was hot yesterday, and it is hotter today than yesterday." "Mr. Wang is very hardworking, but Ms. Chen is even more hardworking than Mr. Wang."

Machine Translated by Google

(3) Because sentences with "ÿ" imply a higher degree than other things, the single sentence "I think oolong tea tastes better" should mean that it tastes better than other unmentioned teas. Students often do not easily understand the implied meaning, so teachers must explain it clearly.

4. Not only..., but also...

(1) The sentence pattern “not only..., but also…” connects two clauses, and the latter clause has a further meaning. If the two clauses have the same subject, the subject comes before “not only”, as in textbook examples (1) and (2). If the two clauses have different subjects, the subject comes after “not only”, as in textbook example (3). (2) The teacher uses two things to practice, first practicing those with the same subject, and then practicing those with different subjects. For example: “Oolong tea is not only fragrant, but also delicious.” “Going on a business trip abroad is not only busy, but also tiring.” Then practice “Not only are my colleagues very nice to me, but my boss is also very nice to me.” (3) Sometimes the clause connected by “not only..., but also…” can only use “also” or “also”. In order not to confuse students, this lesson uses the most complete sentence pattern for practice. So “I not only speak more fluently than before, (but also) I can speak longer sentences.” or “Zhang Jia’an not only went on a business trip to Europe, (but also) he also went to see his aunt.”

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. I'm returning the exam papers to everyone.
2. I don't know how I did on the exam.
3. Both listening and writing skills have improved.
4. I speak more fluently than before and can speak in longer sentences.
5. As long as you continue to study, your Chinese will definitely get better and better.
6. Learning Chinese is not only fun, but also very useful.
7. I agree with Du Xiang's idea.
8. Taiwan not only has many fun places to visit, but also many unique snacks, and Taiwanese people are very welcoming to foreigners. friendly.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher, acting as Teacher Lin, Gao Liya, Zhang Jia'an, and Du Xiang, reads sentences from the text. Students listen to the lesson first. The gist is that the teacher can speak while demonstrating new words or key sentences.

2. Lead the class in reading the text aloud, and have the students repeat it together. Prepare a PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards to help them understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with independent dialogue and including important vocabulary and grammar. This is to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on each part initially.

Machine Translated by Google

A few sentences. During teaching, the teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. Through this dialogue, students understand the meaning and can also pronounce the sentences. Then, other questions are used to allow students to repeatedly practice these key sentences.

4. This lesson is divided into three parts.

Part One Text

Teacher Lin: Classmates, this semester is almost over. I'm returning your final exam papers to you all. Please take a close look at them.

Gao Liya: Wow! I'm so nervous, I wonder how I did on the test.

Du Xiang: You are the most diligent student, don't worry.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is the "ba" sentence in grammar one. The teacher can demonstrate the meaning of the sentence and the direction in which the test paper is moved by the actions while reading the text (the teacher gives the test paper to the students). The teacher can then practice the usage of grammar one by saying "I return the test paper to Du Xiang, I return the homework to Gao Liya, I put the homework on the table".

(2) Present the sentence: "I don't know how I did on the test." Introduce the explanation from Grammar 2. First, say, "I'm going to return your test papers now. What are you thinking about?" Let the students naturally say, "(I'm thinking) I don't know how I did on the test." Then, use the textbook scenario to let the students naturally express their questions. The teacher gives hints: "I want to go to a baseball game tomorrow, I want to go on vacation this weekend, I want to buy Christmas presents, I want to try making pumpkin pie, I want to buy oolong tea..." etc. When students don't know the specific answer, respond with "I don't know..."

Part Two Texts

Gao Liya: At the beginning of this semester, I remember I often misspelled words. This time I only misspelled two words. My listening and writing skills have both improved, I'm so happy!

Du Xiang: I think Chinese characters are too difficult to write, but speaking is easier. Now I speak more fluently than before, and I can speak in longer sentences.

Zhang Jia'an: I've been traveling a lot for work lately and haven't had much time to do my homework, so I didn't do very well on the test. But I know more characters than before, and my tones are more accurate now.

Teacher Lin: You all attend class very attentively and your exam results are also good. As long as you continue to study, your Chinese will definitely get better and better.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is on the progress of the three students in Chinese. Learning Chinese is divided into four parts: listening, speaking, writing, and tones, with exercises focusing on "progress." Students are asked in sequence: "Do you feel your listening comprehension has improved? Do you feel your speaking ability has improved? Do you feel your writing ability has improved? Do you feel your tone has improved?"

(2) From "I have improved," guide students to further expressions, using the grammatical particles "than" and "more." For example, "My listening comprehension is better than before," "My speaking is more fluent than before," and "I can write more words than before." From the teacher's perspective of encouragement, these sentences all imply that "I was good before," and now I am "even better," which is good for building students' confidence.

Machine Translated by Google

(3) "Exam scores" are often not what students with this background care about. If teachers give students exams, they should encourage them by saying, "Your exam scores have improved compared to before; they are better than before." Depending on the student's situation, You can also ask students, "Do you think your grades have improved?" (4) To encourage students, teachers can have them say, "As long as I continue to study, my Chinese will definitely get better and better." Use affirmative sentences and positive tones to boost students' confidence. Then practice talking about other things using the sentence pattern "As long as I work hard and am serious, things will definitely get better and better."

Part Three Texts

Du Xiang: I really enjoy learning Chinese. It's not only fun but also very useful, and I will study hard. Gao Liya: I agree with Du Xiang. My supervisor told me that because I can speak Chinese, the company can... They can send me to work in Taiwan.

Zhang Jiaan: If you go to Taiwan, you can work and learn Chinese at the same time, and your Chinese will definitely improve. soon.

Teacher Lin: That's right. Taiwan is a great place to learn Chinese, with excellent teachers and schools.

Du Xiang: I've heard that Taiwan not only has many fun places, but also many unique snacks, and Taiwanese people are very friendly to foreigners.

Gao Liya: That sounds great. I hope I'll have the chance to visit Taiwan someday.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: Grammar 4, connecting simple sentences into complex sentences. (2) Show the sentence: "Not only..., but also...", and practice with the theme of "learning Chinese". Du Xiang talks about "the benefits of learning Chinese", and Gao Liya talks about "the benefits of working in Taiwan".

(3) Then, use the grammar exercise "Not only..., but also..." to practice "What is the environment like for learning Chinese in Taiwan?" How are the snacks in Taiwan? What are the Taiwanese people like? etc.

(4) Use "Not only..., but also..." to let students talk about their understanding or impressions of Taiwan. (5) It can be extended to students' experiences and benefits in learning other languages and other things. Teaching process for each part of the text: (1) Show the sentences and mark the key words and grammar. (2) Briefly explain the points to note about the words and grammar. (3) Let students practice the words and grammar and complete the grammar exercises in the textbook.

(4) Use the materials you have already learned to do extended exercises. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson and practice using the key sentences in this section by asking questions.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) What did Teacher Lin say as soon as class started?

(2) Why was Gao Liya a little nervous? (3) What did Du Xiang say when he saw that Gao Liya was nervous? (4) How did Gao Liya do on the exam this time?

Machine Translated by Google

(5) Does Du Xiang find writing difficult? What does he find relatively easy?

(6) In what aspects has Du Xiang improved? (7) How did Zhang Jia'an do on the exam? (8) Why did Zhang Jia'an not do well on the exam?

(9) In what aspects does Zhang Jiaan feel he has made progress?

(10) Teacher Lin said how to improve one's Chinese? (11) Does Du Xiang find learning Chinese interesting? (12) Does Gao Liya agree with Du Xiang's idea? (13)

Because Gao Liya can speak Chinese, what does her company want to do? (14)

Does Zhang Jiaan think it's good to learn Chinese in Taiwan? (15) What has Du Xiang heard about Taiwan? ÿ

Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (16) Do you think your Chinese has improved? In which aspect has it improved the most? (17) What do you think is the most difficult aspect of learning Chinese? (18) Do you think it's necessary to be able to write Chinese characters? (19) Do you think learning a language is beneficial for exams? (20) Do you think it's necessary to learn a language in that country? Why?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after recitation, understand the content of the dialogue, and use Chinese characters or spelling.

Write out the missing parts using phonetic transcription.

(2) Method: a. Have

students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

Machine Translated by Google

c. Write Chinese characters or pinyin, depending on the student's level.

d. If students learn quickly and at a high level, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters they practice writing.

3. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and new words learned in this lesson fluently.

(2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind students of the sentences to be used. b.

Have students ask each other questions, completing the sentences as they do so.

c. The teacher asks students to report the opinions of the students they interviewed to the whole class. d.

The teacher may also select two students to complete a dialogue in front of the whole class.

4. Expression Practice

(1) Objective: To train students to write short essays based on their own ideas and then report them orally. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format.

b. Have students complete the entire short passage at home according to their own circumstances, using a computer to type it out.

c. Ask students to give oral presentations in the next class. Ideally, they should be able to present without notes to train their natural expression.

5. Expression Practice

(1) Objective: To train students to create short essays based on their own ideas and present them orally. (2)

Method:

a. Ask students to choose a story background. Create a story based on the theme shown in the picture, and the story should include people, events, time, place, and objects.

b. Students can type out the story and then share it in class. c. The teacher uses the number of words and grammar points used in the book as a criterion for judging whether students have learned and improved.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials : Teachers

may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

The semester was almost over, and Ms. Lin returned the final exam papers to everyone. Gao Liya was worried she hadn't done well, but Du Xiang assured her that Gao Liya was the most hardworking student and would definitely do well. Du Xiang didn't like writing Chinese characters, so he didn't do very well on the exam. However, he felt that his listening comprehension had improved this semester, and he was also speaking more fluently, which made him very happy. Zhang Jia'an wanted to learn even better, so she planned to go to Taiwan next summer to study Chinese and visit relatives. She thought she would definitely improve her Chinese faster in Taiwan.

Machine Translated by Google

question:

( 1. Gao Liya did not do well on the exam.

( 2. Du Xiang likes writing Chinese characters, so he did very well on the exam.

( 3. Du Xiang's speaking ability has improved. 4.

( Zhang Jia'an wants to go to Taiwan to study Chinese and also visit relatives.

ÿ Teaching Tips:

Teachers can flexibly adjust their teaching methods according to individual student needs or the learning environment. If students are unwilling to learn Chinese characters or do not write them well, teachers can first focus on listening, speaking, and recognizing Chinese characters. Students are allowed to use phonetic symbols/Pinyin to practice listening and speaking first, while simultaneously learning Chinese characters, hoping to attract students' interest in writing Chinese characters.

Cultural Unit (III)

Chinese people

Chinese society places great importance on social relationships, and the appropriateness of how one addresses another can influence how others perceive them and future relationships. This has led to a complex cultural phenomenon regarding forms of address. We can learn more about this by looking at some commonly used categories of terms of address.

Basic principles.

When it comes to kinship terms, you first need to know whether the person is from the father's or mother's side, and then consider their generation, age, and gender. For example, siblings of the same generation are called "Auntie" for the mother's sisters and "Uncle" for the brothers. The father's sisters are called "Auntie" for the father's sisters and "Uncle" or "Uncle" for the brothers (depending on age).

The main principle for using titles based on job title is rank and age. For colleagues of higher rank, use their official title or job title, not their first name. If the company manager's surname is Wang, address him as "Manager Wang." For colleagues of similar rank but more senior or older, a kinship term is usually added after their surname or first name, such as "Brother Wang" or "Brother Mingwen." For subordinates, you can address them by their first name.

Social forms of address are the most complex, requiring consideration of many factors. When addressing elders, to show respect and goodwill, it's generally appropriate to use their highest-ranking position. Even if they have retired or are no longer in that position, we wouldn't simply call them "Mr. Wang" or "Ms. Lin," let alone address them by their first name. For example, even a retired school principal would still be addressed as "Principal Wang."

If the two parties are close and of similar status, they will use more intimate terms of address, often employing kinship terms. For example, if the other party is around the same age as one's parents, a kinship term can be added after their surname, such as "Aunt Gao," "Uncle Lin," or "Uncle Wang." If they are around the same age or slightly older, they can be addressed as "Sister Gao," and if they are younger, they can be addressed directly by their first name.

From the above explanation, we can see the basic principles that Chinese people consider when addressing someone, in addition to the existing relationship between them. In addition, respecting the elderly and honoring the virtuous is also an important factor.
