Editor’s Note

I. Teacher's Manual Structure 1.

Learning Objectives: Each lesson has a theme, and after completing the lesson, students will be able to express content related to the theme in Chinese. 2. Teaching Focus and Activity Design.

(1) Warm-up activities: It is suggested that the warm-up activities involve the teacher introducing the theme of this lesson. (2) Vocabulary teaching: a. It is suggested that the teacher teach vocabulary in the following order, with practice methods and example questions. b. Explain the meaning and usage of words with multiple meanings in this lesson. For example, "L1 - like", "L3 - install the Internet / L10 - can't fit", etc. Only practice the meaning in this lesson, without extending to other meanings and usages, to avoid being too complicated and causing confusion for students.

c. As this book gradually introduces words with similar meanings, learners may wonder about the differences. Teachers can provide more examples from the teacher's manual to explain the differences and prevent students from misusing them. Examples include: "ÿÿÿ" (tì/bÿng), "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (xìxÿn/xiÿoxÿn), "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (xìxì/xiánxì), and "ÿVÿVÿ" (zài/Vzhe).

d. Some words can be used separately as morphemes, considered as combinations or abbreviations of two words, and can be extended. However, it is easier to teach them as complete phrases, so this book chooses to teach them as a single word. For example, "parking lot" and "alleyway entrance". If separated into "parking" + "field", it can be extended to baseball field and basketball court, but "field" alone is not as easy to learn as the whole "parking lot", so it is listed as a single word. Another example is "alleyway entrance", which is the intersection of an alley and another road. "Entrance" alone is difficult to explain and describe, so presenting it as a whole word is beneficial for teaching. e. New words are distinguished into general vocabulary and phrases. "Phrase" is mostly composed of several words, has a complete meaning, and is not easy to define in terms of part of speech. For example, "all" and "unexpectedly". The reason for presenting words as phrases is either because of grammatical complexity, or because the overall meaning of the phrase is clear and easier for learners to learn, so this method is adopted. It is best for teachers to teach and practice using phrases as a whole. The English translation of vocabulary also follows this method, translating the meaning of the entire phrase. f. Explaining which words students are prone to misusing during learning, for teachers' reference.

(3) Grammar Instruction: a. Explain the meaning and key points of each grammar rule. b. Explain the meaning of the grammar in the most easily understandable way, and demonstrate how to use the grammar with example sentences, and then consolidate the grammar with exercises. c. This book is more difficult, with more complex sentence structures, such as "if...", "besides..., also...", "not at all", "even...", etc. When translated into English, there may be situations where it is not easy to completely correspond or fully show the usage, so learners are prone to making grammatical errors. However, these sentence structures can improve learners' language ability from simple sentences to complex sentences and paragraphs, so they are necessary to learn. Although the difficulty is higher, if the teacher practices the usage extensively, the learning goal can be achieved.

d. Use comparison to explain the differences between previously learned grammar and the grammar in the current lesson, such as: "lived for a year, lived for a year", "wearing clothes, wearing clothes". (4) Text teaching:

a. List the important sentences from the lesson, and the teacher should focus on these sentences during the lesson.

Machine Translated by Google

b. Suggested classroom teaching process. A "segmented teaching" approach can be adopted, introducing the vocabulary and grammar of each segment in sequence. Vocabulary is introduced based on teaching objectives, not necessarily in the order of the vocabulary list; some words listed later can be introduced first, but the quantity must be controlled. This segmentation allows students to have diverse practice, including vocabulary, grammar, and dialogue from the text, in the first segment. The first segment can then be incorporated into the second segment using the same model for student interaction, following a spiral-upward concept in classroom teaching. c. Provide questions about the text and information to enhance teacher-student interaction in the classroom.

(5) Comprehensive Activities:

a. Reading aloud and recognizing the text: The aim is to promote fluent speech and correct pronunciation, and also to strengthen the ability to recognize Chinese characters. b. Completing sentences from the text: The aim is to consolidate the sentences in the text and practice writing Chinese characters. If you have difficulty writing Chinese characters, You can use Zhuyin Pinyin instead.

c. Reading Practice: Using the vocabulary and grammar learned in the lesson, create a short passage similar to the text to review the content, cultivate learners' reading comprehension skills, and train reading techniques. d. Communication Tasks and Activities: Practice listening and speaking skills through various interactive activities. e. Real-Life Material Reading: Each lesson uses materials from simulated environments to enhance learners' comprehension of real-life materials.

(6) Supplementary teaching of the text:

The teacher's manual includes a supplementary exercise for each lesson. This exercise is a short passage similar to the lesson's, rewritten using the new vocabulary and grammar, for students to review. Teachers can use it as listening material to train listening skills or as reading material to improve reading ability.

3. Textbook exercise answers: including grammar exercises and integrated activity answers. 4. Workbook answers: including listening exercise texts. 5. Test paper answers. 6. Supplementary website resources: including Chinese character stroke order website, Chinese character animations, and website links related to the textbook content. 7. One test paper.

II. Workbook Usage Guidelines 1. Text Comprehension: To assess students' understanding of the lesson. This can be completed by the teacher in class, or students can complete it independently.

The student returned home to complete the task.

2. Listening Practice: Part One involves dictating new vocabulary words; students listen to the recording and write down the words. Part Two involves word identification; students listen to the recording and choose the correct word. Part Three involves listening to a short passage and answering questions. Part Four involves listening to a dialogue, practiced in the form of a Chinese language proficiency test. Teachers can play the recordings in class for some exercises, and have students practice the rest at home. Alternatively, students can practice once in class and again at home to strengthen their listening skills. The recordings provided in this textbook are available for download.

3. Vocabulary Fill-in-the-Blank: Students understand the meaning of the sentences and choose the correct vocabulary to fill in the blanks. 4. Reading Comprehension: The first part uses pictures to train students' sentence reading and comprehension skills. The second part is a short passage reading. And answering questions. Both practice methods are in the form of a Chinese language proficiency test.

5. Answer and complete sentences: Practice the grammar of the lesson in a question-and-answer format, cultivating the ability to respond to others' language in interactive situations. 6. Translation: Comprehensive practice of grammar and vocabulary. 7. Writing Chinese characters: Chinese characters not yet practiced in the first three books. Because there are many characters, even repeated appearances can be considered as further practice. practice.

Lesson 1

I want to go to Taiwan

I. Learning Objectives

Subject: Work

After completing this lesson, you will be able to:

1. Explain the reasons for the job change. 2. Explain the circumstances of the job change.

3. Explain your plans for the future.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. The teacher initiates the topic by asking, "Where do you plan to go during (the next holiday/the XX festival/summer)?" 2. Based on students' responses, continue the topic by asking questions such as, "Why do you want to go there? What will you do there? How long will you stay?" 3. The focus of this lesson is "Golia being sent to work abroad." The teacher can start by asking students about this topic. Such plans and ideas, why did you want to work abroad, etc.

4. The teacher collects students' opinions on the advantages and disadvantages of working abroad and compiles them into a classroom activity.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. This is the first lesson, focusing on words related to daily life, such as "good afternoon," "late," "sorry," "it's okay," and "life." It also supplements vocabulary not yet listed in the textbooks of the previous three books. The teacher designs scenarios to allow students to naturally say these words. The lesson reviews "good morning," "good afternoon," and "good night," and the example of "A says: Sorry, B says: It's okay."

2. "Late" can only be used for things like going to school or work, when there's a fixed time but you didn't finish on time, such as "late for work," "late for class," or "late for a date." It cannot be used for things like "late for a plane" or "late for a bus." Although transportation also has fixed times, you should use "the plane was delayed."

Machine Translated by Google

3. "Excitement" and "worry" are frequent stative verbs, commonly used in spoken language. Teachers can practice usage by asking questions such as, "What/when do you get excited? When/what situations make you worried?" "Worry" can also be practiced with the topic "I'm worried about..." For example, "The weather in the world is getting hotter (colder) now, are you worried?"

4. The verb "ÿ" has many uses. We often hear "ÿÿÿ/ÿÿÿ" (answer the phone/answer the cell phone), which has a different meaning from the "ÿ" in this lesson. The teacher can have students practice "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (Who are you going to the airport to pick up? Who will pick you up to attend an event?). The teacher can compare "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (going to the airport to send someone off) and "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (going to the airport to pick someone up) to clearly distinguish between them.

5. The new vocabulary word "lost" can easily spark a discussion. Ask students: "Have you ever gotten lost? Where did you get lost? Why?" "How did you get lost? What do you do when you get lost?" etc.

6. The new words "ÿÿ (liúliú)," "ÿÿ (mÿihÿo)," and "ÿÿ (yìnxiàng)" in this lesson can be practiced together. "ÿÿ (liúliú)" is not easy to use alone and requires a fixed collocation. The teaching method in this lesson is to let students know that certain new words can be fixedly collocated into a phrase (word chunk), and then practice using them in different contexts. For example, "What thing/which place/which activity left you with a beautiful impression?" Then, "What thing/which place do you have a good impression of?". "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ (liúliú shÿnshÿn de yìnxiàng)" will not be taught in this lesson because the Chinese character for "ÿÿ (mÿihÿo)" is relatively easy. It will appear in later lessons in this book. 7. The preposition "ÿ (tì)" can sometimes be interchanged with "ÿ (bÿng)," but they are not completely equivalent. "ÿ (bÿng)" is used more frequently in Taiwan, but in the sentence "Teacher Zhang is sick, I'll take Teacher Zhang's class," where "ÿ (tì)" means "to substitute," using "ÿ (bÿng)" is inappropriate.

8. "ÿ (xiàng)" is a stative verb in this lesson, meaning similar. For example, "A is very similar to B" / "A is very unlike B." Let's practice.

9. "Finally" is often used to indicate that after a long period of time (as perceived by the speaker) or some difficulties, the goal has finally been achieved. In everyday expressions, it emphasizes the time or difficulty involved. You can ask students when they would say, "...I finally..." at work.

III. Grammar Teaching 1. (If/Suppose) ...

(1) The meaning of "ÿÿ" is similar to "ÿÿ" (if), and it is always placed at the end of the first sentence, followed by a sentence that indicates the result. "ÿÿ" is often paired with "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (if/if) to form the sentence pattern "ÿÿÿÿÿ……ÿÿ" (if/if...if). Omitting "ÿÿÿÿÿ" makes it more colloquial, but the meaning remains the same.

(2) The word "ÿÿ" itself cannot be translated, so it must be used in conjunction with a sentence structure. Advanced students need to learn the natural spoken expression of their native language. Using "ÿÿ" separates two sentences, provides a pause to facilitate thinking, and also softens the tone. Compare "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" with "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ"

2. Besides..., also...

(1) The sentence pattern "In addition to..., also..." indicates the scope of the topic, including the people and things mentioned above, as well as the people and things in the following clause. The subject can be before "in addition", such as in example (1).

Machine Translated by Google

"Besides diving, my brother also likes mountain climbing." This can also be placed before the second sentence, such as in example (2): "Besides speaking German, he can also speak French." (2) The grammar of "besides..., also..." is similar to "..., also (in addition)..." in Book 2. However, the former more clearly indicates that "in a large range (of activities), in addition to part A (diving), there is also part B (mountain climbing)".

(3) Practice with pictures. Choose the answer from many pictures (options). Ask students, "What do you like to eat/drink?" and ask them to answer, "Besides coffee, I also like cola." You can also ask, "I know you like to drink coffee. Do you like any other drinks?" Students answer, "Besides coffee, I also like cola." Practice this repeatedly.

3. Put...V (one)V

(1) The "ba" sentence is followed by a repeated action verb, indicating a request or order to the noun (object) in the sentence, but with a milder tone. This "ba" sentence is followed by a monosyllabic verb, and "yi" can be omitted, such as: Example (1) "Please wash this piece of clothing." If it is followed by a disyllabic verb, it should be in the ABAB form, such as: Example (2) "If you have time, please tidy up the room."

(2) Because the "ba" construction contains elements of request and command, it is effective to practice it in a question-and-answer format. For example, "What do you do before eating? / What do you do before going out? / What do you do before Chinese class?" etc. (3) Students can practice using everyday situations, such as the steps of making a salad, such as "I wash the vegetables, I cut the tomatoes/fruits, I put in the salad dressing, I mix these things together." This can be combined with previously learned "ba" constructions for review.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. A: Sorry I'm late. B: It's okay. 2. You finally have a chance to visit Taiwan. 3. I'm so excited to go to Taiwan.

4. I'm not worried about getting lost anymore.

5. The company said they hope I can stay for another six months if needed.

6. Besides work, what other plans do you have?

7. I most want to try Taiwan's unique snacks and visit all the famous places.

8. Her personality is very similar to yours. 9. I'll ask Jiawen to inquire about it for you.

Machine Translated by Google

10. I hope you have a good impression of Taiwan.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with its own independent dialogue, including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part initially. The teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, other questions are used to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar. (3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar within the context of the text.

(4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson, use information questions to extend the discussion topics, and practice using the key sentences of this lesson.

Part One Text

Wang Mingwen: Liya, good afternoon. I'm sorry I'm late. Gao Liya: It's okay, I just arrived too.

Wang Mingwen: You asked me to have coffee, do you want to talk to me about something?

Gao Liya: Yes! I have good news for you. My company is sending me to work in Taiwan.

Wang Mingwen: Wow! Congratulations! You finally have the chance to go to Taiwan. Gao Liya: Although I'm very excited to go to Taiwan, I'm also a little nervous. I don't know if I can adapt to the work and life there.

Wang Mingwen: Don't worry, you'll adapt quickly.

(1) This paragraph uses "I'm sorry" to express that one should not be late, which is also a way of greeting someone. The other person should respond with "It's okay" to be polite. (2) Show the sentence: "I have some good news to tell you." When one has something happy or good to share with others, Using this phrase is also a way to start a conversation.

(3) Show the sentence: "You finally have a chance to...". Have students practice "I finally have a chance to...". (4) Show the sentence: "Although going to Taiwan makes me very excited, I am a little nervous and I don't know if I can adapt to the work and life there." Here, first practice "although..., but...", and then practice "I don't know if I can...". These two grammar points have already been learned. The teacher prepares other scenarios for repeated practice.

Machine Translated by Google

Practice. For example, "I heard you're changing jobs. Do you think you can adapt to the new job?", "I heard you're going to travel to Asia alone. Are you worried?", "I heard you're getting married soon. Are you nervous?", etc.

Part Two Texts

Wang Mingwen: (Don't worry, you'll adapt quickly.) I'll ask my younger brother Jiawen to pick you up from the airport.

Goria: Great! That way I won't have to worry about getting lost.

Wang Mingwen: How long does your company plan to send you there?

Gao Liya: Half a year. However, the company said they hope I can stay for another six months if needed.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: learning "to pick up someone at... (place/airport)". Reviewing "to drop off (someone) at..." (Local area/airport). The teacher used local examples for practice.

(2) Show the sentence: "If needed, the company hopes I can stay for another six months." Ask students questions in various scenarios, such as "If it rains tomorrow, will you still go to play ball? / If your boss scolds you, what will you do? / If someone invites you to a big meal, what will you say?" Practice, and finally complete the textbook exercises.

Part Three Texts

Wang Mingwen: After you arrive in Taiwan, what are your plans besides work? Gao Liya: I most want to try Taiwan's unique snacks and also visit all the famous places.

Wang Mingwen: Well then, let me introduce you to a Taiwanese colleague. Her personality is very similar to yours. She is very lively and enthusiastic, and she will definitely be willing to take you around to have fun.

Gao Liya: That's great! If the company agrees, I'd also like to learn Chinese.

Wang Mingwen: I'll ask Jiawen to inquire for you; they should be able to find a suitable school and Chinese class for you.

Gao Liya: Thank you for arranging all this for me. You're such a good friend. Wang Mingwen:

You're welcome. Friends should help each other. I hope you have a wonderful impression of Taiwan.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is the three things Gao Liya wants to do after coming to Taiwan. The teacher asks the students, "What does Gao Liya want to do after coming to Taiwan?" to start the topic. (2) The teacher presents the sentences for the three things: "I want to try the special snacks in Taiwan the most", "I also want to see all the famous places", and "If the company agrees, I also want to learn Chinese". Then the teacher presents the sentence patterns, using "S most wants to...", "S wants to see all of...", and "If..., I also want to..." to fit each person's expectations and things they want to do.

(3) The teacher presents the sentence: "Her personality is very similar to yours" to practice the sentence pattern "A is very similar to B". The teacher first uses topics such as "personality, preferences, interests, and work" to practice. Then the teacher extends to more abstract topics such as "environment, local characteristics, and ideas". (4) The teacher presents the sentences: "A: Thank you for arranging these things for me. B: Friends should help each other." Students learn how to express gratitude to others and how to respond politely.

Machine Translated by Google

(5) Show the sentence: "I hope you have a good impression of Taiwan." This is a polite way of responding to someone. When someone expresses their gratitude to you, use this sentence to end the conversation. It is very formal and polite.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example Questions: (Teaching questions, based on textbook content, to check students' understanding) (1) Why did Wang Mingwen say "I'm sorry" to Gao Liya in the text? (2) Why did Gao Liya ask Wang Mingwen to have coffee? (3) What news did Gao Liya tell Wang Mingwen? (4) Was Gao Liya excited to go to Taiwan for work?

(5) Although Gao Liya was happy to go to Taiwan, what was she worried about? (6) Who did Wang Mingwen ask to pick up Gao Liya? (7) What did Gao Liya say when she found out someone was picking her up? (8) How long did the company plan to send Gao Liya to work in Taiwan? (9) What were Gao Liya's plans after arriving in Taiwan? (10) Who did Wang Mingwen ask to take Gao Liya out to play? Why?

(11) Besides getting to know Taiwan, what else did Gao Liya want to do? (12) Why did Wang Mingwen say he helped Gao Liya? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions)

(13) Do you have the opportunity to work abroad?

(14) Where do you want to work? Why? (15) If you were to work abroad, what would you be most worried about? Why? (16) If you were to work abroad, what would you most like to try?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, and then have them read the text aloud individually in turn, while correcting their pronunciation.

7. Have students complete narration exercises based on the text, aiming to enable them to retell the key points of the text in a storytelling style. In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly... Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Methods: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups. b. Have the teacher call on students to take turns reading the dialogue aloud.

Machine Translated by Google

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method: a. Have students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Writing Chinese characters or pinyin can be arranged according to students' levels. d. If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of characters to be written in the text. e. The teacher can reinforce characters that students haven't yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in the lesson), by filling in the blanks in these characters or phrases and having them read or write them again.

3. Reading comprehension

(1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar of this lesson in order to improve comprehension and reading skills.

(2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more conducive to identifying characters and understanding sentence meaning in a shorter time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check whether they understand the short passage they have read.

c. The teacher can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or inference questions not mentioned in the passage. For example: What do you think Mr. Gao Liya is worried about?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage.

e. Further discussion based on the content.

4. Expression Practice

(1) Objective: Students will be able to fluently use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson to express their own opinions. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind you of the questions to use (above the table).

b. Have students ask each other questions, and complete the form while making the interviews.

c. The teacher asks students to report on the information they interviewed to the class. d. The teacher may also select two students to conduct a dialogue in front of the class. e. This interview can be used as a warm-up activity for the first day of the course.

5. Textbook Extension Activities

Please research or ask friends to find out what famous snacks and fun places there are in Taiwan, and share them with everyone in class. (1) Objective: To understand Taiwan

Machine Translated by Google

(2) Method:

a. Show a map of Taiwan and ask students how much they know about Taiwan.

b. Following the questions in the textbook, ask students to research information independently and then present the findings. At this point, students can discuss in their native language, with the teacher providing supplementary information by highlighting important words (city names, food names). To fill in the Chinese expression.

c. Teachers may also play Taiwanese videos (see Extended Resources) or provide relevant short articles for students to watch. Seeing and reading.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Gao Liya has been studying Chinese for over two years and has always hoped to have the opportunity to work in Taiwan. Recently, her boss felt that Asia was developing better and better and wanted to open a branch in Asia. He wanted Gao Liya to work in Taiwan for six months first to see how the mobile phone market was doing in Taiwan.

Gao Liya was thrilled to hear the news. She could finally work in a place where Chinese was spoken. Moreover, Wang Mingwen said he would have his younger brother, Wang Jiawen, pick her up from the airport and book a hotel for her in advance. These arrangements put Gao Liya and her husband at ease; they didn't have to worry about getting lost at the airport or not knowing where to stay or buy things upon arriving in Taiwan. Gao Liya was very happy and believed everything would go smoothly.

Lesson 2

Welcome to Taiwan

I. Learning Objectives

Subject: At the Airport

After completing this lesson, you will be able to use Chinese to: 1. Describe the process of taking a flight. 2. Describe the location and facilities of an airport. 3. Understand the traffic situation near the airport. 4. Express gratitude and concern.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Start a conversation around the theme of "flying". For example: "Do you like flying? What are the interesting things about flying? What are the troublesome things about flying? Is flying tiring? Are you tired after a flight of more than ten hours? Do you fly often? Where do you go?"

2. Using a map of the airport near your residence as an example, discuss "What do you see at the airport? Are there people seeing off passengers or arriving at the airport?" "Do you have experience picking people up at the airport?" This question connects to the airport picking-up scenario in this lesson.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. The new words in this lesson can be divided into several groups. Those related to airports include "luggage, trolley, push, heavy, parking lot, exit, exchange money, Taiwan dollar," etc. These words are easy to understand and use. The teacher can show pictures of airports and then practice with questions. For example: "When you go on a business trip, do you bring a lot of luggage? Is it heavy?", "Do you have to pay to use the airport trolley? Is it convenient?", "If you are picking up a friend, where would you meet them? In the parking lot or at which exit?", "Do you exchange money at the airport when you go on a business trip/travel abroad? Why?"

Machine Translated by Google

2. The new vocabulary words "ÿ (wÿng)," "ÿ (zhuÿn)," and "ÿÿ (yòu zhuÿn)" in this lesson need to be practiced together with Grammar 4. Also, add "ÿ…..ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (cóng yÿng qián yÿng guÿ, meaning "walk straight ahead") and "ÿ……ÿÿÿÿÿ" (zài liÿu zuÿ zhuÿn, meaning "turn left/right turn"). Native speakers might say "(ÿÿ)ÿÿ" (wÿng qián) in spoken language, which means "(ÿÿ)ÿÿÿ" (wÿng qián) in the same way. Students should first learn the complete phrase "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (wÿng qián yÿng zÿu) before practicing the abbreviation "ÿÿÿÿ" (wÿng qián zhí zÿu) to avoid confusion. 3. The words "ÿ (è)," "ÿ (bÿo)," and "ÿ (kÿ)" are frequently used in daily life. Teachers can practice them by interacting with people as if they were greeting them. For example: "Before class, have you eaten? / Class is almost over, are you hungry now? / Are you thirsty?" 4. Some modes of transportation have already been learned in this lesson; this lesson will add "ÿÿÿÿ (jiÿo gÿng gÿng gÿng)," "ÿÿ (bÿoshì)," and "ÿÿ (dàn jùn)." The teacher first demonstrates the term "transportation tools" and lists previously learned transportation tools (airplane, ship, train, subway, car, bus, etc.), all of which are nouns. Students only need to be able to name them. "MRT" is a term unique to Taiwan, and the teacher explains to the students that Taiwan's "MRT" is similar to "subway".

5. After students are familiar with the modes of transportation, add the word "traffic jam" for practice. For example: "When is traffic jam likely? / What mode of transportation avoids traffic jams? / What would you do if you were stuck in traffic?" Note that "traffic jam" is a separable verb and can be separated to insert other components, such as: "A: How long were you stuck in traffic? / Was the traffic jam very bad? B: I was stuck for two hours / It was very bad (complement)." While native speakers often say "How long was the traffic jam / It was very bad," this is not standard grammatical expression. Students should practice the correct way.

That's the statement.

6. The new word "ÿÿ" refers to a vague range. When using it, a quantifier must be added before it, such as "around one hundred yuan", "around one hour", "around twenty people". It can be compared with "over one hundred yuan" to see the difference. "Over one hundred yuan" must be more than "one hundred yuan", while "around one hundred yuan" can be "ninety-seven (97) yuan" or "one hundred and four (104) yuan".

7. In this lesson, "ÿ" is used as a preposition, which is frequently used in Taiwan and is trending towards replacing "ÿ" (tì), taught in the first lesson. It's important to note that native Taiwanese speakers often use it incorrectly due to the abundance of redundant words in their language. For example: "Restaurant waiter: Please help me look at the menu." / "Nurse: Please help me take off my shoes." The preposition "ÿ" introduces the beneficiary of an action (as explained in Contemporary Chinese Curriculum I). "Looking at the menu" is not for the purpose of giving the waiter a benefit, so "ÿÿ" is redundant. Teachers should avoid using phrases like "Please help me read this sentence" or "The teacher will help you with the lesson" in class to avoid reinforcing the impression of grammatical errors.

8. The word "ÿ" (shÿng, meaning "save") is easily misused by students when translated into English, and "ÿÿ" (shÿngqián, meaning "save money") and "ÿÿ" (cúnqián, meaning "save money") are easily confused. Therefore, students should first practice "ÿÿÿ" (shÿngshÿnjiÿn, meaning "save time") in this lesson. After students understand the different usages, they can then extend the concept to "ÿÿ" (shÿngqián, meaning "save money"), "ÿÿ" (shÿnglì, meaning "save effort"), "ÿ ÿ" (shÿngdiàn, meaning "save electricity"), etc. However, this extension is not necessary.

9. The word "careful" (ÿÿ) is easily confused with "cautious" (ÿÿ), which was learned in Book 3. The teacher gave examples to illustrate the difference. For example: "To do things carefully/cautiously, you won't make mistakes." / "He is very careful/cautious in his work." Both words are acceptable, but the emphasis is different. However, "To drive carefully at night" should be said as "To drive carefully at night."

That's not appropriate.

10. The words "ÿ" and "ÿÿ" in this lesson can clearly help students learn the concept of a Chinese character combining with other characters to form a word. "ÿ" is a verb, and "ÿÿ" means "a cart that is pushed". The word structure is modifier-head (subject-subordinate), and it is a noun.

Machine Translated by Google

11. The phrase "all" is used as a modifier (adjective) before a noun, and must be followed by "ÿ" (de), so it is taught as a phrase. Before learning this word, students often use the adverb "ÿ" (dou) instead of "all," such as: "*The school's students are all Americans / *I like to drink all beverages." Teachers need to provide ample practice to reinforce students' usage skills.

12. Practice the new vocabulary word "ÿÿÿ" (bù dé le) together with Grammar 1. 13. The phrase "ÿÿ" (bù dào) can imply a preconceived notion, so be careful not to use it impolitely. Use it appropriately based on your familiarity with the other person, the level of intimacy, and the context. For example, if an employee says to their boss, "I didn't expect you could speak Chinese," the tone could be one of admiration, disbelief, or something like, "How could that be?" Therefore, the teacher needs to clearly explain when to use it and what tone is appropriate.

III. Grammar Teaching 1. Vs

(1) "ÿÿÿ" is used to indicate the degree of the preceding verb, often describing a very high or profound degree. It is placed after "Vs + ÿ".

(2) Practice using the structure "Vs + ÿ + ÿÿÿ". The teacher can use any of the stative verbs (Vs) that have been learned. For example: The weather is extremely hot today / There is an extreme amount of work / I am extremely hungry now and can eat two hamburgers / Houses in big cities are extremely expensive.

(3) The degree expressed by the word “ÿÿÿ” is higher than that expressed by “ÿ” or “ÿ”.

2. First..., then...

(1) This sentence pattern indicates the sequence of two consecutive events. We learned "first...then..." in Book 2. These two grammar points can be used together to form "first...then...".

(2) The teacher can use many action pictures for students to practice. For example: "washing hair + taking a bath, buying groceries + cooking, etc." "Finding information + writing plans, booking hotels + traveling abroad", etc.

3. not at all / not at all / not at all

(1) This is a negative sentence structure used to emphasize that the topic being discussed has nothing or almost nothing, such as: Example (1) I just finished eating and I'm not hungry at all now. (2) He didn't prepare for yesterday's exam at all, so he didn't do well. The adverb "ÿ" can be replaced by "ÿ", such as: Example (3) Many students find writing Chinese characters not difficult at all. If the thing being discussed has an object, this object needs to be placed after "ÿÿ" and before "ÿ", such as: Example (4) She didn't drink any wine yesterday.

(2) It is easier for teachers to practice by asking questions. First, give a positive scope and a positive situation, and let students refute or deny it so that they can use this grammar smoothly. For example: "Teacher: I heard that you are very good at making desserts, is that right? Student: No, I can't make any at all." "Teacher: There are a lot of cars in the parking lot on the weekend, right? Student: No, there are not many cars in the parking lot today." The teacher can practice in this way with various situations.

Machine Translated by Google

4. From...to...

(1) This sentence pattern indicates an action (movement) from a location toward a destination, such as: Example (1) If you walk straight ahead from here, you will find that coffee shop. If the starting point is known to both speakers, "from" can be omitted, such as: Example (2) We can see a beautiful yard (from the living room).

(2) This sentence pattern is an important exercise for students to demonstrate their ability to narrate and explain. The teacher needs to find a map and have the students describe the route they take while looking at the map. Note that a verb needs to be added after "from...to...", such as "walk" in "you walk straight ahead from here" in example (1) and "look" in example (2). Students may be influenced by their native language and say "*you walk from here forward / *we (from the living room) look out". (3) After practicing describing walking or driving routes while looking at a map (in the grammar exercises in the book), practice this sentence pattern in other situations that are not walking or driving routes. For example: "run from inside the house to outside / look from the first floor to the tenth floor / walk from the mountain to the bottom / read from the first sentence down", etc.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. Thank you for picking me up at the airport.
2. I'm so sorry to have kept you waiting so long.
3. After a flight of more than ten hours, plus jet lag, I was extremely tired.
4. I ate a lot on the plane, so I'm not hungry at all, just a little thirsty. 5. Walk straight ahead from here, then turn right and you'll see the bank. 6. I'll go to the parking lot to get my car. 7. If there's no traffic, it takes about an hour to drive there.
8. I didn't expect it to be so close, it's so convenient!
9. Thank you for booking the hotel for me; it saved me a lot of time.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the entire lesson.

Machine Translated by Google

3. Divide the text of this lesson into two parts, each with its own independent dialogue and containing important vocabulary and grammar points. This is done to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part initially. During teaching, the teacher will first present the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. Through this dialogue, students will understand the meaning and be able to pronounce the sentences. Then, other questions will be used to encourage students to repeatedly practice these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar. (3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar within the context of the text.

(4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson, use informational questions to extend the discussion topics, and practice using the key sentences of this lesson. Part One: Text

Wang Jiawen: Hello, Gao Liya. Welcome to Taiwan!

Gao Liya: Jiawen, thank you for picking me up at the airport. I'm so sorry to have kept you waiting so long. Wang Jiawen: It's nothing. All your luggage is here, right? The stroller looks a bit heavy, let me push it! Gao Liya: Thank you, thank you so much. I'm exhausted from the more than ten-hour flight and jet lag.

Wang Jiawen: Are you hungry? Do you want to eat something before going to Taipei?

Gao Liya: I ate a lot on the plane and I'm not hungry at all now, just a little thirsty. I'd like to buy a bottle of water. But I don't have any Taiwanese dollars, so I'll have to exchange some money at the airport first.

Wang Jiawen: It's very convenient to exchange money at the airport. Just walk straight ahead from here and turn right, and you'll see the bank.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is to express gratitude to others for their help, to express gratitude in a polite and appropriate manner, and to talk about the situation on the plane.

(2) The teacher uses two sentence patterns for interactive practice: "Thank you for picking me up/dropping me off/helping me..." and "I'm so sorry to have made you wait so long/go through so much trouble/take so much time/get so tired." The teacher provides relevant scenarios, hoping that students will respond politely when they receive help. (3) Commonly used vocabulary in airports includes words such as "push," "cart," "luggage," and "heavy/light." The teacher can practice with questions and answers in "airport scenarios." The word "suitcase (large/small)" can be added.

(4) The term "time difference" is often encountered when trading with foreign countries, traveling abroad for business, or going on international trips. Teachers can use examples from cities in different continents (Taipei, Paris, Dubai, New York, Bangkok, Tokyo, etc.) to illustrate the time difference between different places, which is several hours. The East and West coasts of the United States have time differences, which is easy for American students to understand. A topic that can be extended is "How to adjust to (not yet learned) time difference?" (5) Teachers can use questions such as "Are you tired after taking a long flight (more than five hours) (add "long-haul" as appropriate)?", "What do you do on the plane?", "Do you like the meals on the plane?", and "Which airline has the best meals?" to discuss the situation on the plane. (6) Use an airport map (a local airport floor plan can be used) and mark "exit, entrance, pick-up area, drop-off area, parking lot, bank, restaurant, etc." to let students practice describing the map. You can start by

The route is described in the student's native language once, and then in Chinese. Students can compare the differences between the two and it is also helpful to memorize the Chinese way of speaking. The sentence patterns can be from simple to complex, such as (a) "Go from... to..., and then (turn right/left) and you will see it." (b) "Go from... to..., and when you see... turn right/left, and then go forward... and you will see it." Depending on the students' level, "go forward for one minute/go forward for another twenty meters/go forward a few steps," etc. can be added. (7) The teacher uses the pictures in the integrated activities section of the textbook to practice reading the Chinese instructions and describing the route. Part Two Text

Wang Jiawen: Please wait at this exit for a moment, I will go to the parking lot to drive the car over.

Gao Liya: How far is it from Taoyuan Airport to Taipei?

Wang Jiawen: Not far. Taoyuan is also in northern Taiwan. If there's no traffic, it's about an hour's drive. We've arrived. Besides driving, you can also take a bus or the airport MRT.

Goria: I didn't expect there to be so many modes of transportation so close by. It's so convenient!

Wang Jiawen: After we arrive in Taipei, I will take you to your hotel so you can rest.

Gao Liya: Thank you for booking the hotel for me. It saved me a lot of time. You're so thoughtful. Wang Jiawen: You're welcome. You're a good friend of my brother's, and this is your first time visiting Taiwan, so I'll definitely make sure to treat you well!

(1) This section focuses on explaining the distance between the two locations and several modes of transportation. Students who have never been to Taiwan will have no concept of the distance from Taoyuan Airport to Taipei. This section is simply to introduce the situation in Taiwan and practice distances. That's all there is to it.

(2) The teacher asks: "Wang Jiawen said, is the airport far from Taipei?" and "How can I get to Taipei from which airport?" The teacher can ask the students questions based on local realities and local transportation methods. For example: "Is it far from here to the airport? / How would you get to the airport if you were to take a plane?" The teacher should use the sentence pattern "about ~, besides..., also..." to guide the students to answer.

(3) The teacher provides a scenario for students to use "I didn't expect...". For example, the teacher says, "Airplane tickets used to cost XX yuan, now they cost XX yuan," and the students respond, "I didn't expect airplane tickets to be so expensive now." The teacher says, "I went to a restaurant yesterday, but it was too crowded and there were no seats," and the students respond, "I didn't expect that restaurant to be so expensive..." "So popular." The teacher then gave a few more examples for interactive practice. (4) Practice polite phrases "Thank you for helping me..., which saved me (time)...". The teacher said, "If a colleague brings you lunch so you don't have to go out, how would you thank him?" The student responded, "Thank you for bringing me lunch, which saved me some time." The teacher said, "If a colleague helps you check a contract/document, how would you thank him?" The student responded, "Thank you for helping me check the contract, which saved me a lot of time/prevented me from making mistakes." The teacher then gave a few more examples for interactive practice.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) Why did Gao Liya come to Taiwan? (Review of Lesson 1) (2) Who went to the airport to pick up Gao Liya? (3) Was Gao Liya's luggage heavy? Who helped her push her luggage?

Machine Translated by Google

(4) Was Gao Liya tired after getting off the plane? Why? (5) Why didn't Gao Liya want to eat anything and only wanted to drink water? (6) Why couldn't Gao Liya go to buy water? (7) Wang Jiawen said, is it convenient to exchange money at the airport?

(8) Where did Wang Jiawen park his car? (9) How far is it from the airport to Taipei, according to Wang Jiawen? How long does it take? (10) What modes of transportation can be used from the airport to Taipei? (11) Does Gao Liya find it convenient to travel from the airport to Taipei? (12) What did Wang Jiawen do for Gao Liya? (13) Why did Gao Liya say that Wang Jiawen was very thoughtful? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions)

(14) When you travel abroad, is your luggage heavy? (15) How do you get to the airport? Do you drive yourself or is someone else driving you? (16) When you travel abroad for business, will someone pick you up? (17) Do you help friends book hotels and arrange travel? (18) How do you host a good friend who comes from abroad?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Integrated Activities 1. Reading and Recognizing the Text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly... Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after recitation, understand the content of the dialogue, and use Chinese characters or spelling. Write out the missing parts using phonetic transcription.

(2) Method: a. Have students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Write Chinese characters or pinyin, depending on the student's level.

d. If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters to be practiced in the text.

e. Teachers can reinforce the Chinese characters that students have not yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in this lesson), by filling in the blanks in these Chinese characters and words, and having them read or write them again.

3. Reading comprehension

(1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar of this lesson in order to improve comprehension and reading skills.

(2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more conducive to identifying characters and understanding sentence meaning in a shorter time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check whether they understand the short passage they have read.

c. The teacher can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or inference questions not mentioned in the passage. For example: Why do you think Gao Liya brought her usual medicine?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage.

e. Further discussion based on the content.

4. I heard about the interactive activities.

Please mark the city names listed below on the map of Taiwan and state the location of each city in Taiwan.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and locative words they have learned fluently. (2) Method:

a. If the textbook does not include pinyin, the teacher can provide a chart with pinyin.

b. Explain the activity format and remind students of the sentences to be used. c. Have students ask each other questions, with one student representing A and the other B. d. The teacher can also ask two students to repeat the dialogue they just practiced in front of the whole class.

5. Reading authentic materials

(1) Objective: To train students to read real-life materials.

(2) Method:

a. Ask students to look at the pictures in the textbook. The pictures already have English text. If students have weak Chinese character recognition skills, leave both the English and Chinese texts on. If students have strong Chinese character recognition skills, the teacher can cross out the English text and only read the Chinese signs.

b. Then look at the question and let the students find the answer from the picture themselves. c. The teacher can guide the students not to pay attention to/focus on words they haven't learned yet, but to guess/find the answer using clues from words they have learned.

d. The teacher asks students to take turns giving their answers. If there are any incorrect answers, the teacher provides guidance on reading strategies. For example: pay attention to a certain meaning of a word (foreign currency exchange), and then extend it to the meaning of the whole word (the currency in Taiwan Dollar, related to exchanging money).

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Gao Liya was exhausted after a ten-hour flight to Taiwan. As soon as she got off the plane, she saw Wang Jiawen waiting to pick her up. Gao Liya was thirsty and wanted to buy a bottle of water, but she didn't have any Taiwanese dollars. Wang Jiawen took her to the airport bank to exchange money. Gao Liya had a lot of things with her heavy luggage, so Wang Jiawen helped her push it and they went to the parking lot to get their car.

From Taoyuan to Taipei, if there's no traffic, it only takes about an hour. Gao Liya thought Taoyuan Airport was very close to Taipei, which was very convenient. Wang Jiawen also told Gao Liya that besides driving, she could also take the airport MRT or a bus to the airport. Gao Liya hadn't expected the transportation from the airport to Taipei to be so convenient, which gave her a very good first impression of Taiwan.

Questions: (Please answer with (•/×) or (T / F)) ( ) 1. Gao Liya felt very tired from flying. ( ) 2. Gao Liya wanted to eat as soon as she got off the plane. ( ) 3. Wang Mingwen took Gao Liya to a bank in Taipei to exchange money. ( ) 4. Gao Liya didn't know before that transportation from Taoyuan Airport to Taipei was very convenient.

Lesson 3

My rented apartment is nice.

I. Learning Objectives

Topic: Renting a House.

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. State your housing needs. 2. Describe the surrounding environment of the house. 3. Describe the condition of the house you are renting.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. The teacher can use questions like "Are you currently renting a house?" or "If you wanted to rent a house, what kind of house would you like to rent?" to introduce the topic of this lesson. 2. The teacher asks everyone to discuss "What kind of house is a good house (an ideal house)?" At this time, students can use their native language. If the teacher hears students say any new words from this lesson, they should write them on the blackboard (write them down). This can also be used as a reference for which new words need to be added.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. The teacher must provide special explanations for the new words "house," "apartment," and "building" in this lesson. In Chinese, "house" is a superordinate noun, encompassing all types of houses, which is why Taiwanese people are accustomed to saying "my house..." or "that house...". Translating "house" as "house" can lead to misunderstandings among American students, as "house" refers to a bungalow or detached house in Taiwan. It would be best for the teacher to find some pictures of Taiwanese houses to make the explanation easier. In Taiwan, the distinction between "apartment" and "building" is not very clear. According to the real estate brokerage industry, "apartment" usually refers to a building with seven floors or less, while "building" refers to a building with more than seven floors. Buildings/apartments with five floors or less often do not have elevators, so in this lesson, to introduce related vocabulary, we will write "sixth floor," "elevator," and "stairs," etc.

2. The measure word "ÿ" in this lesson is used with buildings. Before learning this, teachers/students can use "ÿÿÿÿ" (that house) to express this. After this lesson, teachers will mostly use "ÿÿÿÿ……" (that building...). To avoid complexity, this lesson only teaches "ÿÿÿÿÿ?" (How many floors do you live on?) because "ÿ" (floor) is also a measure word. If needed, "ÿ" (layer), "ÿÿÿ" (five-story building) can be added. However, the teacher should explain the difference between "ÿ" and "ÿ". 3. The measure word "ÿ" (step) is only used with "ÿÿÿ" (a few steps). "ÿÿÿ" is often used to express "not far". Teachers can teach students when to use this expression to describe a less clear distance. The usage of indicating steps (the next step) is more difficult and should not be practiced together.

4. The new words “alley” and “road” can be supplemented with the measure word “ÿ” (tiáo), meaning “this alley/road”. The word “ÿ” has already been learned in Book 2 as “a skirt”.

5. The vocabulary word "convenience store/supermarket" can be supplemented with the measure words "home, a convenience store/supermarket". 6. The verbs "old," "bad," and "clean" are frequently used and have a wide range of applications. Teachers can present many scenarios and then ask students questions. For example: "Is your phone/car/apartment old?", "What would you do if your phone/car broke?", "Is your apartment/car clean? How do you usually clean your apartment?". The usage of "bad" is broad and can be extended to other aspects/situations. 7. In this lesson, "just right" means "suitable, meeting requirements," such as: "This piece of clothing fits me perfectly/The sugar in the coffee is just right, not too sweet." The adverb "just right" has a different usage, such as: "I just happened to be going to the coffee shop, I can buy you coffee."

8. The phrase "alleyway entrance" should be explained as "the intersection from the alley to the road." To reduce teaching difficulty, this lesson will directly use "alleyway entrance," but the teacher can extend it to "intersection/Da'an Road intersection," etc. 9. Vocabulary related to renting can be practiced together. Previously, "rent" was learned; this lesson will teach "rental" (the cost of renting a house) and "rental fee" (the money to rent a house or rent X (car/furniture)). This lesson also introduces large numbers like "thousand" and "ten thousand." The teacher will use local rent figures for practice. The teacher might ask: "How much is your monthly rent? / How much is the rent for that apartment building? / Do you think your rent is expensive? / Are apartment rents getting more and more expensive here?" Students might reply: "My monthly rent is one thousand dollars (US dollars). / The rent for that apartment building is one thousand five hundred dollars. / I don't think my rent is expensive. / Apartment rents here are getting more and more expensive." Due to currency issues, the use of "ten thousand" might be less common in Western countries. However, teachers should still have students practice using the terms correctly to avoid errors caused by students directly using their native language. For example: "*My car costs ten thousand dollars." 10. Practice using items in an apartment together, such as: "furniture, TV, refrigerator, internet." Teachers should practice with related questions. For example: "Does your rented apartment include furniture? What kind of furniture?", "Does your rented house have a TV, refrigerator, and internet?" Teachers can add "home appliances" as needed to distinguish between "furniture" and "home appliances."

11. This phrase "water fee, electricity fee, internet fee" can be practiced together with "rent" and "included". For example: "Does your rent include water, electricity, and internet fees?" Students can answer according to their actual situation, "My rent includes water, electricity, and internet fees, but does not include internet fees." It can also be extended to include other fees depending on the student's actual situation/local situation.

12. The new word "ÿ" has many meanings, but this lesson teaches "to install". For example, to install a computer or a network. It is not the "ÿ" used in the sense of "packing books in a backpack".

Machine Translated by Google

13. The new word "ÿÿ" (concern/care) is a noun in the text, often used in the polite expression "Thank you for your concern." Students should also learn to respond with gratitude when they receive concern from others, saying "Thank you for your concern." The teacher can also practice the usage of verbs using questions like "What are you concerned about now? / ..., who are you concerned about?"

14. Practice the new words "in addition, plus, not counting" using grammar.

III. Grammar Teaching 1.

Additionally

(1) "In addition" is a conjunction indicating things that are included in addition to the scope mentioned above. It can be followed by a sentence or paragraph.

(2) “In addition” can also be used as an adverb, indicating only that it is outside the scope mentioned above. If it is used as a compound word, it is often used with adverbs such as “still”, “again”, and “again”. For example: Please drink this cup of coffee, I will buy another cup.

(3) In this lesson, "ÿÿ" is marked as a conjunction, which is similar in meaning to "ÿÿ" (in addition). This is because it connects two sentences, and the two sentences discuss two different aspects of the matter. The sentence in the text is "The apartment is in the alley, and it is very quiet. In addition, it is very convenient to buy things." If it is used as an adverb, "You drink first, and I will buy another cup," it indicates that it is in one situation.

(4) “Additionally” can also be used as a demonstrative word, “additionally + of + N” / “additionally + (of) + quantifier + N”, such as “another person”, “another cup of coffee”. This usage did not appear in the example sentences in this lesson.

2. Considered/Not Considered

(1) When comparing the subject with other things, "ÿÿ" is used to introduce the estimate or judgment made after the comparison. For example: Example (1) The hotel rents for two thousand dollars a night, which is considered cheap. The sentence means "Generally speaking, a hotel that costs two thousand dollars is cheap". The negation of "ÿÿ" is "ÿÿ" (not considered), for example: Example (2) It's a five-minute walk from here to the MRT station, which is not far.

(2) Using "considered/not considered" to tell others one's judgment or thoughts expresses a less firm opinion, with some flexibility in degree. It sounds less arbitrary and more polite. Comparing "two thousand dollars for rent is considered cheap" with "two thousand dollars for rent is very cheap," one can sense the difference in the degree of opinion expressed by the tone.

(3) This grammar represents the judgment and values of ordinary people, but it is also related to the subjective consciousness of students. For example, the same rent may be "expensive" to some people, but "not expensive" to others. Therefore, when practicing, teachers provide various scenarios and let students express their own judgments and opinions. There is often no standard answer (fixed answer) for the sentences. Students should not be forced to conform to or agree with the answers set by the teacher.

(4) During practice, repeatedly ask questions to get students to answer. You can use pictures to help, such as: "Picture: A mobile phone that costs 10,000 NT dollars", ask students: "Is a mobile phone that costs 10,000 NT dollars expensive?", "Picture: A map of Taiwan", ask students: "Is it far from here (where you live) to Taiwan?" Ask students to answer according to their own opinions.

Machine Translated by Google

3. In addition

(1) Use "plus" to indicate that the topic/theme is composed of different factors. "Plus" is followed by The part that is more decisive is...

(2) The "plus" exercise in this lesson connects two sentences, so it occurs within a single context and has two possible causes. A complex sentence is formed by combining elements and reasons.

(3) When practicing, teachers need to provide a more complex, multi-factor scenario so that students can easily produce sentences. The teacher asks, "If the rent for an apartment building is relatively expensive, what might be the reason?" Students freely give several reasons, and then the teacher guides them to form a new sentence using "plus". For example, "Because that apartment building is close to the MRT station, and it's new, the rent is relatively expensive." or "Because that apartment building is near a park, and it's conveniently located, the rent is relatively expensive."

4. Wait... then...

(1) This sentence pattern indicates the temporal sequence of actions. The second action can only be performed after the time allotted for the first action has ended. (2) This sentence pattern, along with "first...then...", indicates the sequential order of two actions. However, "first...then..." emphasizes the temporal sequence, while "wait...then..." emphasizes that the second action can only be performed after the first action has been completed. The completion of the first action is a necessary condition; if the first action is not completed, the second action will not occur.

(3) When practicing this grammar, you can use pictures of two actions or events to connect them. For example: "Eat breakfast + Go to work". If you practice "first...then...", the teacher will ask: "What did she do? / What did she do first, and then what did she do?" But when practicing "wait...then...", the teacher should ask: "When is she going to work? / Is she going to work right away?" The student will respond: "She will go to work after she has eaten breakfast / She will go to work after she has eaten breakfast." The way of asking questions is slightly different.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The following points are the key learning points for this lesson) 1. Although the building looks a bit old from the outside, the apartment is very clean inside. 2. I live on the sixth floor. There is a living room, two bedrooms, a kitchen, and a bathroom. It's just right for me living alone.

3. If the elevator is broken, it's not too tiring to walk up the stairs.

4. The apartment is located in an alley, so it's very quiet. It's also very convenient for shopping.

5. Turn left at the alley entrance and walk a few steps; there's a convenience store and a supermarket. 6. The rent of 25,000 yuan isn't expensive in my opinion.

7. All furniture is new, plus a TV and refrigerator. 8. Rent does not include water and electricity.

Machine Translated by Google

9. If you need my help in the future, please let me know and don't hesitate to ask. 10. Once I've tidied up the house, I'd like to invite you over for a visit.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into four parts, each with its own independent dialogue, including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part. The teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, other questions are used to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar.

(3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar in the context of the text.

(4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of the lesson, use information questions to extend the discussion topics, and practice using the key sentences of the lesson.

Part One Text

Wang Jiawen: Liya, this is Jiawen. Have you moved yet?

Gao Liya: It's all moved in. With the help of my colleagues, everything is fine.

Wang Jiawen: How's the apartment you rented?

Gao Liya: Although the building looks a bit old from the outside, the apartment I rented was very clean, and I thought it was good.

Wang Jiawen: Which floor do you live on? How many rooms do you have?

Gao Liya: I live on the sixth floor. It has a living room, two bedrooms, a kitchen, and a bathroom. It's perfect for me living alone. Wang Jiawen: The sixth floor is nice. If the elevator breaks down, walking up the stairs isn't too tiring, haha!

(1) The teaching focus of this section is to explain and describe what the rented house is like. (2) The teacher reviews the complement "ÿ" that has been learned before, using the sentence pattern "ÿVÿÿOÿÿÿÿ" from this lesson, such as: "Have you moved in yet? / Have you cooked dinner yet? / Have you tidied up your room yet?". Or use the sentence pattern "OÿÿVÿÿÿÿ", such as: "Have you moved in yet? / Have you cooked dinner yet? / Have you tidied up your room yet?". Or use the "ÿ" sentence, such as: "Have you ÿOVÿÿÿ", such as: "Have you moved in yet? / Have you cooked dinner yet? / Have you tidied up your room yet?". The teacher can decide based on the students' learning ability.

Machine Translated by Google

(3) The teacher compares several pictures of buildings/apartments to present the content of this lesson. One picture shows a building/apartment that looks very new from the outside, and the other shows a building/apartment that looks very old from the outside. The teacher first asks, "How does this building/apartment look?" and lets the students practice saying "This building/apartment looks very new/very old." (4) The teacher then compares several pictures of rooms inside buildings/apartments and asks the students, "How do the rooms/living rooms in this building/apartment look?" and lets the students practice saying "This room/living room looks very new/very old/very clean/very beautiful."

(5) The teacher uses the two sets of pictures above to cross-match and have students practice the text content using "Although..., but...". The teacher can also use the learned "Not only..., but also..." to practice another combination of perspectives.

(6) The teacher shows a building/apartment map, marks the "sixth floor", and then asks the students, "Which floor does Gao Liya live on?" and then asks the students, "Which floor do you live on?" If the students all live in bungalows/detached houses, this question and answer can be omitted.

(7) The teacher first uses pictures to have students name the rooms inside the building/apartment, and then practices "There are X rooms in this building/apartment, and...". Extending the question, ask students, "How many rooms do you have at home? Is it just right for one person/family to live there?" Let students practice "My home has XX rooms, and it's just right for two/three people to live there" or "My home's rooms are too big or too small." Since the words "enough" and "not enough room" have not yet been taught, the teacher can supplement them as appropriate.

(8) In Taiwan, most apartments on the seventh floor (inclusive) have elevators, and some apartments on the fifth floor also have elevators. Students can practice saying "take the elevator" and "walk/climb the stairs," both of which are acceptable in spoken language.

Part Two Texts

Wang Jiawen: (The sixth floor is nice. If the elevator is broken, it's not too tiring to walk up the stairs, haha!) What's the surrounding environment like?

Gao Liya: The apartment is in an alley, so it's very quiet. Also, it's very convenient to buy things. Just walk out of the alley and you'll reach the main road. Turn left at the alley entrance and walk a few steps, and you'll find a convenience store and a supermarket. You can buy everything you need there.

(1) This section focuses on describing the environment around the house. This paragraph first describes the location of the house and the convenience of shopping. Mainly.

(2) The teacher asks, "Where do you live, in an alley or next to the road?" If you don't live in the city, you may not be able to use words like "alley" or "alley entrance." The teacher can just let the students understand the meaning as appropriate, without needing a lot of practice. Or, you can practice using "XX intersection" or "next to XX road" according to the local situation.

(3) The teacher creates a map based on the textbook content or draws it on the blackboard and asks students: "Where does Gao Liya live?", "Is it far from her house to the main road?", "What can she see when she walks out of the alley?", "Why is it convenient for her to buy things?". After practicing with the map in the textbook, create a map that is more in line with the local area and let students practice saying the route "from their apartment or company to a certain place (shop, coffee shop, supermarket, restaurant, school)". They should use "from..., towards...V, then walk... and then..." or "walk out of..., towards...V, then walk... and then..." to describe the route.

Part Three Texts

Wang Jiawen: (Sounds good.) Is the rent expensive?

Gao Liya: I don't think it's expensive. The furniture is all new, plus there's a TV and refrigerator. The monthly rent...

Twenty-five thousand yuan.

Wang Jiawen: Does the rent include water and electricity? Has the landlord installed internet for you? Gao Liya:

The rent does not include water and electricity. The landlord has installed internet, but I have to pay for it myself.

I have already paid.

(1) The focus of this section is on grammar points 2 and 3. The teacher uses the question "Is Gao Liya's rent expensive?" to introduce grammar and related vocabulary such as "new, television, refrigerator, ten thousand, thousand". Then, the teacher explains why Gao Liya thinks the rent is not expensive.

(2) Then, by asking the question "Does the rent include water, electricity, and internet fees?", students practice the related vocabulary word "package". Includes, ~fees.

(3) Describe the situation of the apartment where the student lives based on their own circumstances. If the student already owns a house, practice thinking about housing in situations such as "if you want to buy a house, if you go on a short business trip abroad, or if you go on a two-week vacation".

Part Four Texts

Wang Jiawen: You sound very satisfied with your place. If you need any help from me in the future, please let me know.

You're welcome.

Gao Liya: Thank you for your concern. I'll invite you over once I've tidied up the house.

(1) The focus of this section is "how to express gratitude to others and how to respond to their gratitude." (2) The teacher uses phrases like "If you need anything in the future, please do so; don't hesitate to ask" to encourage students to say sentences from the book. In addition, this polite phrase can also be used when you want to express your willingness to help others.

(3) The teacher practiced responding to someone else's previous sentence by saying, "Thank you for your concern. Wait for me... then..." Concern and gratitude.

(4) Teachers should provide more scenarios so that adult learners can respond to others appropriately and politely in social situations, thereby achieving the goal of effective communication.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) Why did Gao Liya's move go so smoothly? (2) Was Gao Liya's rented apartment new or old? (3) Which floor did Gao Liya live on? (4) How many rooms did Gao Liya's rented apartment have? Was it big? (5) Wang Jiawen said that living on the sixth floor was good, why? (6) What was the environment like near Gao Liya's apartment? (7) Why did Gao Liya say that her home was very quiet?

Machine Translated by Google

(8) Is it convenient for Gao Liya to buy things? (9) How much is Gao Liya's rent? (10) Does Gao Liya think the rent is expensive?

(11) Why does Gao Liya think the rent is not expensive?

(12) What does Gao Liya's rent include? What does it not include? (13) Is Gao Liya satisfied with the rented house? (14) When does Gao Liya plan to invite Wang Jiawen to her house for a visit? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (15) How is your rented house? Is it relatively new or relatively old? (16) Is your current place quiet?

Is it in an alley or next to a main road? (17) Is it convenient to buy things where you live?

(18) How much is your rent? Does it include water and electricity? (19) Do you think your rent is expensive or cheap? (20) If you were to move, what kind of house would you like to rent?

(21) Do you prefer to live in an apartment, a high-rise building, or a bungalow (or a detached house. Teacher's supplement)? 6. Have students practice reading the text in groups, and then have students take turns reading the text individually, and correct their pronunciation.

7. Have students complete narration exercises based on the text, aiming to enable them to retell the key points of the text in a storytelling style.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Integrated Activities 1. Reading and

Recognizing the Text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after recitation, understand the content of the dialogue, and use Chinese characters or spelling.

Write out the missing parts. (2) Method: a.

the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Write Chinese characters or pinyin, depending on the student's level.

d. If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters to be practiced in the text.

Machine Translated by Google

e. Teachers can reinforce the Chinese characters that students have not yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in this lesson), by filling in the blanks in these Chinese characters and words, and having them read or write them again.

3. Reading comprehension

(1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar learned in this lesson to improve comprehension and reading skills. (2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more beneficial. Distinguish Chinese characters and understand sentence meaning in a relatively short time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check their comprehension of the passage. c. The teacher can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or inference questions not mentioned in the passage. For example: If the company doesn't pay Gao Liya's rent, will she think 30,000 yuan is too expensive?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage.

e. Further discussion based on the content.

4. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind you of the sentences to be used.

b. Have students ask each other questions, and complete the form while making the interviews.

c. The teacher asked the students to report to the class what the students he had interviewed had said.

d. The teacher can also select two students to have a conversation in front of the whole class.

5. Reading authentic materials

(1) Objective: To train students to read real-life materials. (2) Method: a. Ask students to look at the pictures in the textbook. b. Then look at the questions and let students find the answers from the pictures themselves. c. The teacher can guide students not to pay attention to words they have not yet learned, but to guess/find the answers using clues from words they have learned. For example, "three bedrooms and two living rooms" is an advertising slogan, meaning "three bedrooms and two living rooms", guiding students to guess the number of rooms. The term "suite" has not been learned yet, so the teacher can guide students to guess the size of the rooms based on the rent, then explain what a "suite" is, and then answer questions 1 and 5.

d. Questions 2-4 all have obvious clues. Students can answer the questions by finding the key clues (elevator, TV and refrigerator, subway).

e. After reading, the teacher asks students to take turns giving their answers. If any answer is incorrect, the teacher will correct it. Strategy guidance.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

I'm thinking of moving to a newer apartment. Although my current place is in a small alley, it's quiet at night and convenient for shopping, but the apartment is a bit old and not very clean. Also, I plan to commute to work by MRT, so I need an apartment closer to a station. A friend of mine lives near a station; although it's about a 15-minute walk, taking the MRT avoids traffic and makes him less likely to be late for work, saving him time. I searched online for apartments and found one that looked great – near both a MRT station and a park! However, the rent is NT$30,000, much more expensive than my current NT$20,000. The apartment has a TV and a refrigerator, but I don't need them. After careful consideration, although the rent is higher, the proximity to the MRT station and the lively area with many restaurants and shops will make my life more interesting. In the end, I decided to rent this apartment.

Question: (Please answer with (•/×) or (T / F))

(1. My current apartment is a bit too expensive, so I need to move.

(2. My friend has to walk for more than ten minutes to get to the MRT station. 3.

(Because the MRT doesn't get congested, I can save time getting to work. 4. The area around (the new apartment is very lively with many shops, but I don't find it interesting.

Feng Shui

Feng shui is a very important concept in Chinese culture. Its content is mainly related to architecture and the environment. It has both scientific basis and is mixed with many superstitious methods. From ancient times to the present, it has influenced Chinese people's choice and arrangement of residence.

In short, Feng Shui is a set of theories and techniques that help people understand the conditions for survival in the natural environment, such as sunlight, air, and water, and to choose or arrange their dwellings according to their individual needs. In other words, it reflects the ancient Chinese understanding and respect for nature, and their pursuit of a harmonious relationship with the natural environment. Its application encompasses both the external environment and internal layout of a dwelling, taking into account the influence of Feng Shui. Furthermore, because Chinese people respect their ancestors, in addition to the houses where the living live (Yang Zhai), the feng shui of the graves where the dead live (Yin Zhai) is also considered, hoping that the ancestors can also rest comfortably. So, what about the superstitious aspects?

In traditional societies, a dwelling is often inhabited for a lifetime or even several generations. Therefore, people hope to live there healthily, receive good fortune, and avoid misfortune. Besides professional Feng Shui masters who arrange things according to the homeowner's individual circumstances, most people know some basic methods to ensure their dwelling is auspicious and avoids misfortune. For example, the front door should not face the road, as this is considered dangerous and brings bad luck. The bed should not be placed under a roof beam, as this is believed to make the person sleeping in the bed prone to illness and accidents. These methods are considered superstitious aspects of Feng Shui, but what people seek through them is a peaceful and prosperous life. The basic theory and spirit of Feng Shui—seeking harmony with the natural environment—while ancient, remarkably aligns with modern environmental and energy theories!

Lesson 4

The MRT is fast and convenient

I. Learning Objectives

Subject: Transportation

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Explain commonly used modes of transportation. 2. Explain the advantages and disadvantages of different modes of transportation. 3. Describe your experience of using transportation.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Review the modes of transportation from previous lessons. This lesson will add common vehicles in Taiwan: bicycles/bicycles and motorcycles. locomotive".

2. The teacher begins the discussion by using local modes of transportation, asking questions such as, "What's your most frequently used mode of transportation? Why?", "What do you find the most convenient mode of transportation?", and "What mode of transportation do you think is best suited for this city?" to guide the lesson's theme. 3. In Western countries, bicycles/bicycles or motorcycles/ motorcycles are less commonly used as daily transportation. The teacher then asks students... What would it feel like to commute to get off work by bicycle or motorcycle?

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. This lesson intentionally includes vocabulary related to daily Taiwanese food, such as "soy milk, egg pancakes, chicken leg bento, enough, abundant," etc., to help students learn the names of Taiwanese foods. Teachers should use pictures to show these breakfast or lunch foods that may not be seen abroad, and can also supplement with similar words such as "rice balls, sesame seed cakes, fried dough sticks, and pork rib bento." Although "egg pancakes and soy milk" are mostly breakfast, they are available in Taiwan until noon.

Machine Translated by Google

There are even snack shops that stay open late into the night. Currently, convenience stores in Taiwan sell a wide variety of prepared foods, all of which can be purchased at convenience stores.

2. The word "ÿ" (gòu) is used frequently and requires more practice. Teachers can use pictures like "Is a hamburger/an omelet/a chicken leg bento box enough for lunch?" and ask students to respond with "One XX is enough" or "One XX is not enough." It's important to note that if the answer is affirmative, "ÿÿ" (gòu le) must be used. Students may be influenced by their native language and produce incorrect sentences like "*I don't have enough money/*I don't have enough money." Teachers must emphasize that "ÿ" cannot be used as an attributive (adjective) to modify a noun; it can only be used as a predicate (verb). Examples of usage include "One XX is enough for lunch/Eating only one XX is not enough, I'm still hungry," and "An hour is enough/The preparation time is not enough."

3. The word "rich" is used frequently and requires practice. Teachers can use food as an example. Show pictures of Taiwanese bento boxes or locally available bento boxes/lunchboxes, and ask students, "Is this bento rich? / Is it rich or not?" Then use other foods, such as "fast food set meals / restaurant steak meals," and ask the same questions. If students are advanced, the teacher can extend to more common phrases like "His experience is very rich / He has rich experience." Note that students should not be influenced by their native language and misuse "rich." The scope in which "rich" can be used is limited. For example, saying "*That country is a rich country" is inappropriate.

4. The new vocabulary word "ÿÿ" (gÿi tiÿn) implies an uncertain date and serves as a polite way to decline or postpone a decision. Students can be taught that it can be used when they cannot determine a time or do something immediately. For example, "A: Shall we go out for dinner after work? B: I'm very busy today, let's go another day." B's response indicates that "B may really be busy or B doesn't want to go." The teacher can provide different invitation scenarios for students to practice asking and answering questions. 5. The new vocabulary word "ÿÿ" (wÿ yÿ) in this lesson indicates having one's own opinion or judgment about something. Before learning this, students often use "ÿÿ" (gÿn jué), but the two words are different; "ÿÿ" implies a feeling and lacks judgment. After learning "ÿÿ," students are encouraged to use it more often to respond to others' thoughts, ideas, and opinions. The word "ÿÿ" (wÿ yÿ) has already been learned in Lesson 4 of Book 3. The difference between the two is that "ÿÿ" often implies a judgment about things that differs from the facts. For example, "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (wÿ wÿ yÿ tÿ shÿ mÿi mÿi) means "I think/want" she is American, but she is not. 6. This lesson uses two terms: "bicycle/pedal bike" and "motorcycle/scooter." "Bicycle" is used because the Chinese characters are simpler and it often appears on signs. "Pedal bike" is more colloquial, and the Chinese characters concretely express the meaning of "a vehicle used to pedal." "Scooter" is often seen on signs or in written form. "Motorcycle" is a transliteration from English, more colloquial, and easier to remember. The teacher can have students practice using any of these terms as needed.

7. This lesson introduces many means of transportation and related vocabulary, which should be practiced together. Examples include "taxi," "bicycle," "motorcycle," "car," and "ride." Practice matching nouns with verbs, such as "take a taxi/drive a car/ride a taxi," and "ride a bicycle/ride a motorcycle ." The most common student error is "*drive a bicycle/drive a motorcycle ." Teachers should correct this and provide more practice to ensure correct usage. Extended questions can be asked, such as "Can you ride a bicycle/ride a motorcycle?" and "Have you ever ridden a bicycle/riden a motorcycle?" 8. Practice words related to the MRT (subway), such as "route," "yellow line," "green line," "line," "transfer," "station," and "train number," together. Start with the Taipei MRT map from the General Activities Office, as it has fewer words and is simpler. Then practice using a subway map of your residential area to express various phrases. For example: "How many MRT lines are there in this city (Taipei)? / What lines are there? (Yellow Line/Green Line/Red Line) / Which line have you taken?", "Do you need to transfer from XX to XX? At which station do you transfer?", "Do you know how frequent the Taipei MRT/XX subway service is?". Then...

Practice using subway maps of your local area or major cities in your country of residence. The routes mentioned in the text are not written "accurately," so there is no need to check the Taipei Metro map for practice.

9. Practice "EasyCard" and "Travel Ticket" together. The EasyCard is unique to Taiwan; students don't need to memorize it. Instead, introduce it as background information. The EasyCard is now a convenient payment tool used in many places. Besides using it to rent bicycles in the text, also mention that it can be used at convenience stores, supermarkets, short-distance trains, taxis, and municipal hospitals. Having an EasyCard is equivalent to having a "travel ticket." 10. The vocabulary words "strange" and "no wonder" differ by only one character and are easily confused. Practice "no wonder" in the grammar section. When practicing "strange," the teacher provides scenarios for students to say "XX is strange." For example: "A person wears clothes of many colors," "Wearing winter clothes in summer," "A person who usually talks is not talking today," "A person who likes to drink beverages doesn't want to drink today," etc.

11. The vocabulary word "dangerous" is easy to understand and practice; teachers can demonstrate it with pictures and scenarios. The corresponding word "safe" appears in Lesson 6; teachers can supplement this in this lesson or simply practice it using the phrase "not dangerous." 12. The word "universal" is more challenging; teachers must provide various contexts. "Universal" doesn't just mean "many or everywhere," but rather a phenomenon. The text "Motorcycles are the most common means of transportation" means "Motorcycles are plentiful and are a popular mode of transportation," making it a universal phenomenon. In this lesson, teachers can focus on scenarios where "things are numerous and ubiquitous." For example, "Beverage shops are very common in Taiwan, and snacks are very common." "Food".

13. "For" and "because" are easily confused. A simple way to distinguish them is "because + reason," while "for" + purpose/reason is more appropriate. Although "for" can also include a reason, to make it easier for students to differentiate, it's best to simply state "for + purpose." For example: "I came to Taiwan to learn Chinese." / "I came to Taiwan because I wanted to learn Chinese." Both sentences are acceptable. However, "I only eat bread every day to save money" is different. Replacing "He exercises every day to lose weight" with "because" would be inappropriate.

14. Practice "popular" first in phrase form, such as: "Oolong tea is popular / That beach resort is popular." If students are more advanced, they can add expressions such as "popular with everyone / Popular with tourists."

III. Grammar Teaching 1.

Condition and Consequence with

(1) The adverb “ÿ” is used in the second clause that is related to the first clause. The first clause is a necessary condition for the second clause. The situation in the first clause can only occur if the situation in the second clause has already happened and become a fact, such as in example (1): We have to buy tickets before we can take the bus. We must “buy tickets” before we can “take the bus”. “Buying tickets” is a necessary condition for “taking the bus”. If there are two subjects, the subject of the second clause should be placed before “ÿ”, such as in example (2): You live with me, so I rented a three-room apartment.

(2) The meaning of "ÿ (only, merely, only)" has already been taught in Lesson 7 of Book 3, such as: "It only took ten minutes to walk from school to my house." This lesson introduces another usage, "condition--only." "ÿ" has many uses, each with its own function; teachers should not over-practice it, putting together grammar points that haven't been learned yet. (3) It also means "just now," such as: "It rained as soon as he got home." It also means "thing." The relationship occurred late, as in: "It was past midnight before he went to sleep."

Machine Translated by Google

2. No wonder

(1) The adverb "no wonder" is used to indicate that the speaker did not understand or know something at first, but later realized it. The reason for this is no longer surprising.

(2) When using "no wonder," there is often another sentence explaining the truth or reason before or after it. "No wonder" needs to be used in specific contexts, and sometimes certain contexts have regional or cultural background factors, making it difficult for students to understand its usage. Teachers should provide more contexts for students to use "no wonder" in response. Refer to the example sentences and practice sentences in the reference book, and add a few more.

3. Interrogative Pronouns used as Adverbs or Adjectives in delimited indeterminate

Reply sentences (interrogative pronouns indicate arbitrary/general reference) (1)

Use interrogative pronouns to refer to any one of the topics being discussed, as long as it meets the requirements of the topic, without specifying which one it must be. Two interrogative pronouns refer to the same thing, such as the same place, the same time, the same thing, the same person, etc. Interrogative pronouns that can be used in this grammar include "where", as in example (1) You can sit wherever you want. "what", as in example (2) We will go whenever you want to go. "which", as in example (3) I will go to whichever is cheaper. "who", as in example (4) Whoever is free will do it. "who" can also be placed before "then".

(2) This grammar requires practice in question-and-answer scenarios. Speakers don't use this grammar alone; it's usually used in response to others' questions. Furthermore, the scope of the response is ambiguous, conveying a polite tone of "not wanting to make a hasty decision, offering advice, or suggesting discussion." When someone asks a question, you can answer directly, such as: "A: Where should we eat? B: I'd like to eat at a delicious restaurant." However, if you want to express politeness or avoid making the decision yourself, you might use this grammar, such as: "A: Where should we eat? B: Wherever you want to go, we'll go. / B: Wherever it's cheap, we'll go."

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. I'm not very hungry, this is enough. 2. It smells delicious, I'll try it another day. 3. I'm almost late for work, that's why I took a taxi. 4. I took the green line, it only took four stops to get to the company, no need to transfer.

5. Taiwan's MRT (Mass Rapid Transit) not only has frequent services, but the tickets are also relatively inexpensive. 6. Bicycles are available for rent by anyone and are very popular.

7. No wonder so many people go cycling as soon as they exit the MRT station. 8. I think cycling is a bit dangerous.

Machine Translated by Google

9. As long as you ride slowly, there won't be any problems.

10. Motorcycles are more convenient; you can go wherever you want without having to walk.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with its own independent dialogue, including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part initially. The teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, other questions are used to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar.

(3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar in the context of the text. (4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of the lesson, use information questions to extend the discussion topics, and practice using the key sentences of the lesson.

Part One Text

Li Guocheng: Liya, this is the soy milk and egg pancake I brought back for you. Is this all you're having for lunch? Gao Liya: I'm not very hungry, this is enough. What did you buy? Li Guocheng: A chicken leg bento box, look, isn't it a lot? Gao Liya: It smells delicious, I'll try it another day.

(1) The teaching focus of this section: common lunches in Taiwan, and lunches for ordinary office workers. (2) The teacher shows pictures of the text and asks, "Have you ever eaten Taiwanese soy milk, egg pancakes, or bento boxes?", and then asks, "If you haven't eaten soy milk, egg pancakes, or bento boxes, would you like to try them sometime?". (3) The teacher then asks, "Is one XX enough for lunch?" and "How much would you like to eat?", hoping that students can naturally use these everyday conversations. (4) The teacher compares pictures of Taiwanese bento boxes with local Chinese lunch boxes and asks, "Which bento box looks tastier? More substantial? Which is more expensive?". Practice the new vocabulary of this lesson.

Part Two Texts

Li Guocheng: I heard that your home is not far from the company. How do you get to work every day?

Gao Liya: I usually take the MRT. I only take a taxi when I'm running late for work. Li Guocheng:

Which line do you take? Do you need to transfer? Gao Liya: I take the Green Line, it's only four stops to the office, no transfer needed. I really like Taiwan's MRT.

Not only are there many train services, but the tickets are also not expensive.

Li Guocheng: Yes! Everyone thinks the MRT is fast and convenient. If you can ride a bicycle, you can also ride one.

Goria: A bicycle? But I don't have a bicycle!

Li Guocheng: You see a lot of bicycles outside the MRT station, right? Anyone can rent them; they're very popular.

Gao Liya: You mean those yellow bicycles? No wonder so many people go riding bikes as soon as they get off the MRT station. I found that strange too! Li Guocheng: You can rent them with an EasyCard. You can try it tomorrow.

(1) This section focuses on explaining the means of transportation and routes used each day. (2) Since students may not have the opportunity to take the MRT/subway, the teacher should first ask, "How do you get to work?" If the students all drive, then ask them questions such as, "How does Gao Liya get to work in the book?", "Which route does she take?", and "Does she need to transfer?". If the students have experience taking the subway, then ask them about their personal experiences based on the local situation.

(3) The teacher asks questions based on the textbook: "Li Guocheng tells Gao Liya what she can ride home from the MRT station?" and "Can Gao Liya rent a bicycle?" The teacher uses these questions based on the text to get students to say the sentences, and then adds local context for practice. The focus of the practice is determined by the teacher based on local needs. (4) The teacher asks: "Is it strange that you can rent a bicycle in the city?" and "Can you rent a bicycle or motorcycle here?" Then the teacher asks students if they know "Which city in the world is like Taipei where you can rent bicycles/motorcycles?" etc.

Part Three Texts

Gao Liya: There are so many cars and motorcycles here, I think riding a bicycle is a bit dangerous. Li Guocheng:

As long as you ride slowly and pay attention to the motorcycles next to you, there won't be any problems. Gao Liya: The MRT is so convenient, why are so many people still riding motorcycles? Li Guocheng:

Motorcycles are even more convenient! You can go wherever you want, without having to walk at all. In Taiwan, motorcycles...

Cars are the most common means of transportation.

Goria: This is the same situation as most Americans who often drive when they go out, it's all for convenience.

(1) The focus of this section is on the convenience of transportation and traffic safety. The teacher asks questions such as "Do you think riding a motorcycle is convenient?" and "Is driving or riding a motorcycle more convenient?" Even those without riding experience can express their opinions.

Machine Translated by Google

(2) Teachers can guide students to talk about what they think is the most common mode of transportation, the most convenient mode of transportation, the most popular mode of transportation, and the most suitable mode of transportation for this city. The answers may be the same, but they can also think about other modes of transportation or what modes of transportation they would like to have. For example, "If this city had a subway, transportation would be more convenient." 5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) What does Gao Liya eat for lunch? (2)

Why doesn't Gao Liya eat much? (3) What does

Li Guocheng eat for lunch, and how does it look? (4) How does Gao Liya usually get to work? (5) Which route does Gao

Liya take? Does she need to transfer? (6) Sometimes Gao Liya takes a taxi, why? (7) What does Gao Liya think of Taiwan's MRT? (8)

What does Li Guocheng tell Gao Liya that she can rent at the MRT station? (9) What does Gao Liya say after she learns that she can rent a bicycle? (10) What does Li Guocheng suggest Gao Liya try? (11) Does Gao Liya want to ride a bicycle? Why? (12) What does Li Guocheng say she should pay attention to when riding a bicycle? (13) Gao Liya thinks the MRT is very convenient, but many people ride motorcycles, does she find that strange? (14) What is a motorcycle to Taiwanese people? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (15) What means of transportation do you usually use to go to work and school? (16) If your city has a subway, do you prefer to take the subway or drive yourself? Why? (17) Do you often take taxis? Why? (18) Can you ride a bicycle? Can you ride a motorcycle? (19) Do you think riding a motorcycle is dangerous? (20) What mode of transportation is most popular in your country? Why?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story. In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly... Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method:

a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups. b. The teacher calls on students to take turns reading the dialogue aloud.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method:

a. Have students fill in the dialogue. b. The teacher calls on students to read aloud or write down the answers.

c. Write Chinese characters or pinyin, depending on the student's level.

d. If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters to be practiced in the text.

e. Teachers can reinforce the Chinese characters that students have not yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in this lesson), by filling in the blanks in these Chinese characters and words, and having them read or write them again.

3. Reading Comprehension

(1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar learned in this lesson to improve comprehension and reading skills. (2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more conducive to identifying characters and understanding sentence meaning in a shorter time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check whether they understand the short passage they have read.

c. Teachers can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or they can ask inference questions not mentioned in the passage. For example: Soy milk is also available in non-Chinese regions/countries, and some people believe that soy milk is better for health. What do you think?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage. e. Extend the discussion based on the content.

4. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind you of the sentences to be used.

Machine Translated by Google

b. Have students ask each other questions, and complete the form while making the interviews.

c. The teacher asked the students to report to the class what the students he had interviewed had said.

d. The teacher can also select two students to have a conversation in front of the whole class.

5. Reading Real-Life Materials

(1) Objective: To train students to read real-life materials. (2) Method: a. Ask students to look at the pictures in the textbook. b. Then look at the questions and let students find the answers from the pictures themselves. c. The teacher can guide students not to pay attention to words they have not yet learned, but to guess/find the answers using clues from words they have learned.

d. Students only need to find the relevant station name (corresponding Chinese characters) to answer the question.

e. After reading, the teacher asks students to take turns giving their answers. If any answer is incorrect, the teacher will correct it.

Strategy guidance.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

As soon as Gao Liya arrived in Taipei, her colleagues took her to ride the MRT and introduced her to it. After she started taking the MRT to work every day, she found it both comfortable and convenient; no wonder most Taipei residents love it. On weekends, Gao Liya would take different routes to explore Taipei. Traveling from the North District to the South District only cost a few dozen NT dollars—so cheap! Gao Liya didn't own a car in Taipei, but the clean and affordable MRT allowed her to go wherever she wanted.

Her colleague, Li Guocheng, also told her that after getting off the MRT, if she didn't want to walk home, she could rent a bicycle; anyone could rent one using an EasyCard. Liya discovered that if she needed to go grocery shopping after work, riding a bicycle would not only save time but also make things easier, which was great. However, there are many motorcycles on the streets of Taipei, which she felt was a bit dangerous. Fortunately, she could ride through alleys from the MRT station to her home; if she was careful of motorcycles, she should be safe.

Question: (Please answer with (•/×) or (T / F))

( ) 1. Most Taipei residents like the MRT, which Gao Liya finds a bit strange. ( ) 2. Gao Liya takes the MRT from the North District to her company in the South District every day. ( ) 3. You must have an EasyCard to rent a bicycle. ( ) 4. Gao Liya is afraid of motorcycles on the road, so she doesn't ride a bicycle home.

Lesson 5

The night market is so lively!

I. Learning Objectives

Topic: Taiwan's Night Markets

After learning this lesson, you will be able to: 1.

Express your level of liking for something you admire.

2. Explain why night markets are popular. 3.

Describe the taste and characteristics of the food.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Prepare several pictures of Taiwanese night markets, and then ask students if they have heard of, seen, or visited them. You can also play short videos related to Taiwanese night markets to let students see what a night market is like.

2. Many countries don't have night markets, but they do have markets, which are similar in nature, where many vendors gather to sell unique items. Western goods, agricultural products, food, etc., can connect the two experiences.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1.

Practice new words related to night markets along with warm-up topics. Examples include "night market," "stalls," "fried chicken cutlet," "stinky tofu," "bubble tea," "papaya milk," and "daily necessities." Pictures of the food can be used; the goal is for students to be able to pronounce them fluently. Add "all kinds" to the vocabulary practice. For example, "The night market has all kinds of daily necessities, all kinds..." Practice these new words using phrases like "snacks, all kinds of drinks, all kinds of clothes/shoes..." 2. The word "attract" is used frequently and requires more practice. After practicing the vocabulary in Part 1, the teacher can use questions like, "Isn't the night market's... very attractive? / Why are they so attractive? / Which food/item in the night market attracts you the most?" The teacher can then use various questions to encourage students to say, "...attracted me." If students have no experience with night markets, examples from local markets, festival stalls, etc., can be used to help them relate to the word "attractive."

3. This lesson introduces vocabulary related to food tastes and textures, such as "crispy," "crispy," and "stinky." The teacher can add previously learned taste-related words like "fragrant," "sweet," "sour," and "spicy." The teacher can use representative foods to review various tastes, such as "hot and sour soup," "chili peppers," "lemons," "cakes," and "oolong tea," practicing phrases like "...tastes spicy/sour/sweet, ... (oolong tea, cake) smells fragrant." Then, add the "crispy," "crispy," and "stinky" words from this lesson, such as "stinky tofu tastes crispy, stinky tofu smells stinky, chicken cutlet tastes crispy." Next, add other common foods to practice textures, such as "potato chips," "fried chicken," "biscuits," "thin-crust pizza," and "crepes." Note that "texture" is different from "taste." Taste is easier to understand, while texture is more difficult to perceive. The word "texture" is also difficult to understand; the teacher should supplement as needed, otherwise, practice with phrases like "tastes.../smells..." 4. The best way to practice the vocabulary words "ÿ (chòu), ÿ (gÿn), ÿ (cháng)" is to use strong-smelling foods, or foods unique to the student's home country, such as stinky tofu, blue cheese, herring, durian, etc. Ask students, "Do you think cheese/durian/herring/stinky tofu smells bad?" You can also ask students to name some smelly things. Then ask, "Do you dare to try cheese/durian/herring/stinky tofu?" or "Do you dare to try cheese/durian/herring/stinky tofu?" Let students respond with "I dare to try..." and "I dare not...". This topic is interesting, and because of different personal preferences, it can also achieve the language function of argumentation and debate in expressing opinions. Teachers can add phrases like "I (do) disagree that XX smells bad/smells good," "I find it strange that anyone would like XX," "To me, XX smells bad/smells good," or "I think XX is the smelliest/smelliest thing in the world."

5. The new words "smell" and "smell" in this lesson need to be distinguished. "Smell" describes a person's judgment or subjective feeling about the smell of something, while "smell" means that one did not know or discover the smell before, but "smells" a certain smell after the action of "smelling". It does not involve personal subjective judgment, but only describes the result of one's action.

6. The word "mentioned" is taught in whole-word units, generally using previously known experiences for practice. The teacher might ask questions like, "Did Gao Liya mention when she's going back to America? / Did your boss mention the job change? / Did your teacher mention which day is the last day of this semester?" Questions can also be based on future possibilities, such as, "When you negotiate a contract, do you mention the payment method first?"

7. Both "ÿÿ" (xiÿoyè) and "ÿÿ" (xiÿoyè) are acceptable. "ÿÿ" refers to late-night snacks, and the Ministry of Education's revised dictionary uses it from "Song Dynasty, Wu Zimou's Menglianglu, Volume 6, New Year's Eve," which is an earlier record. Since the character "ÿ" (xiÿo) is used more frequently, this book primarily uses "ÿÿ." 8. The word "ÿÿ" (xiÿxián) is often used with "ÿÿ" (huòhuó) to form "ÿÿÿÿ" (xiÿxián huóhuó). Teachers can practice this by asking questions like, "What leisure activities do you like?" 9. The adverb "ÿÿ" (jÿhÿ) has a similar meaning to the adverb "ÿÿ" (hÿshÿng), as in "She has almost/almost eaten all the snacks at the night market." Both are acceptable. However, "ÿÿ" can also be used as a predicate (verb), as in "My age is about the same as his," while "ÿÿ" cannot. "ÿÿ" is more formal, while "ÿÿ" is a more common colloquial expression. 10. "ÿÿ" (zhÿnshí) can be practiced together with "ÿÿ" (chídào) from the first lesson. Practice using the topic of whether transportation is punctual, but the word "late" is generally not used for transportation (see Lesson 1). This lesson will again practice the usage of "punctual," "late," and "mistakenly." 11. The interjection "eh" carries a questioning tone, so the tone should rise. This lesson can also review the previously learned "wow," Let's explain and practice together again.

III. Grammar Teaching 1. Already...

(1) The sentence pattern

"Already..." indicates that the speaker has exaggeratedly emphasized that the event was completed a long time ago, such as in example (1) We rented the apartment a long time ago. Sometimes the event mentioned is not completed, but it indicates that there was a plan or intention to do it in the past, such as in example (2) Pearl milk tea is very famous, and I have wanted to try it for a long time. This sentence pattern must be followed by "ÿ" at the end. (2) The usage of "Already..." is not difficult. It is just an extension of the sentence pattern "Already...", adding an emphasis to express that the event happened a long time ago. It needs to be used in interaction between the two to be natural. Therefore, it is best for the teacher to ask and answer questions. The method in the exercise section is sufficient.

2. Yes...

(1) Use the "will..." sentence pattern to emphasize or guarantee that a situation is certain or will happen. For example, in sentence (1), you will like Taiwanese snacks. (2) A: Do you think the boss will agree with my idea? B: Don't worry, the boss will agree. Use "will not..." when negating, for example, in sentence (3), the hotel has already been booked, but...

There will be problems.

(2) This sentence pattern is a common way of saying something to assure someone. The teacher can first use "I think you will like bubble tea," and then compare it with "I think you will like bubble tea." The former is an inference about what will happen in the future, while the latter strengthens the tone and more firmly expresses that the idea is correct. (3) This sentence pattern is more natural when used in interaction between two people, so the teacher can use a question-and-answer format.

The best approach is the same as the method used in the practice section.

3. For... (1) In this sentence pattern, "for" is followed by the person involved, and the sentence expresses the view from the perspective or position of the person involved. For example, in sentence (1), for Americans, driving is the most convenient way to go out. Generally, Americans believe that "driving is convenient" is a fact. In sentence (2), for me, renting a house is better than buying a house. "My" opinion is that "renting is better."

(2) Using this sentence structure to express one's opinion can show that the student's level has improved. In the past, students always said "I think... / I believe...", but if they use "For me, ...", it can better convey the student's more objective thoughts. If they use "For Americans/ Taiwanese people, ...", they can also tell others about things and situations based on the more "common opinions and thoughts" of the relevant parties.

(3) This sentence structure is only natural when used in interaction between the two parties, so the teacher uses a question-and-answer format.

The best approach is the same as the method used in the practice section.

4. Regardless of..., all...

(1) The sentence pattern "no matter...all..." is used to express the fact or situation in the sentence with "all", and it will not be affected by "no matter". The sentence changes and is affected by the difference.

When using this sentence pattern, one of the three usages/structures must be used after "regardless".

Machine Translated by Google

For example, in sentence (1) (S) regardless of A or B, (S) always... I go to work regardless of whether it rains or snows. In sentence (2) regardless of Vs / V not (not/not) Vs / V, S always... I go for a run regardless of whether the weather is good or bad.

Example (3) No matter + QPro (what, which, how much, who, how, how much), S all...

A: The rent is so expensive, do you still want to rent it?

B: No matter how much the rent is, I will rent it. (2)

Students are prone to making mistakes in this sentence pattern because of the influence of their mother tongue. They often make mistakes such as "*No matter how rainy it is , I will go to work." or "*No matter how expensive the rent is, I will rent it." At this time, the teacher must explain again that this grammar must use one of the three sentence structures above, otherwise it is a wrong sentence. The teacher needs to correct the students' mistakes immediately, otherwise wrong sentences will continue to appear.

(3) This grammar exercise can be done in stages. The teacher first asks the students: "When it rains, will you go for a run? / When it snows, will you go for a run?" The students' answers should be either yes (yes) or no (no). Then the teacher asks the students in both situations: "When it rains or snows, will you go for a run?" The students can naturally follow the teacher's questions and insert "no matter" to say the two questions at once: "No matter it rains or snows, I will go for a run." The teacher then asks: "How else can we say it?" Let the students use the structures (2) and (3) to say "No matter if the weather is good or bad, I will..." and "No matter what the weather is like, I will...". (4) This sentence pattern needs to be used in interaction between the two to be natural. Therefore, the teacher asks questions and answers in a question-and-answer manner.

The best approach is the same as the method used in the practice section.

5. VsVs

(1) When two stative verbs are reduplicated, it indicates the speaker's subjective opinion about something, which usually strengthens the original degree of the stative verb. Because the degree has already been increased, no degree adverbs such as: very, too, really, extremely, etc. can be added. For example: *The bubble tea is very sweet. (2) Reduplicated stative verbs (VsVsÿ) can be used as predicates (verbs) or attributives (adjectives). This lesson does not clearly distinguish between them in order to simplify the process. The teacher can tell the students that they can be placed after the subject noun as predicates (verbs), such as in example (1) The chicken cutlet is crispy and delicious. They can also be placed before the noun as attributives, such as in example (2) The sweet bubble tea is the most attractive.

(3) The teacher should find the words "crispy, crunchy, smelly" from this lesson, as well as the monosyllabic stative verbs "fragrant, sweet, sour, spicy, cold, hot, yellow, red, green..." that have already been learned, for practice. Using real pictures is the easiest way to achieve the teaching objective. First, refer to the grammar exercises in the textbook, and then add other things that students often use for practice.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson) 1. I often heard Mingwen mention night markets when I was in the United States, and I have wanted to go and visit them for a long time.

2. Are you available?

3. I will be there on time.

4. For Taiwanese people, visiting night markets is a popular leisure activity. 5. Night markets offer a wide variety of snacks, and the prices are generally reasonable, making them appealing to everyone.

6. That chicken cutlet is huge, bigger than my face! 7. Stinky tofu smells stinky, but it doesn't taste stinky at all. 8. Stinky tofu doesn't smell as bad as it does; no wonder Taiwanese people like it.

9. Papaya milk is just as delicious as bubble tea.

10. You can't see everything at the night market in one night. You can come whenever you want and take your time to explore.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with its own independent dialogue, including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part initially. The teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, other questions are used to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar. (3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar within the context of the text. (4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson, use informational questions to extend the discussion, and practice using the key sentences from this lesson.

Part One Text

Chen Fangyi: Liya, it's me, Fangyi. Mingwen asked me to take you to the night market. Are you free the day after tomorrow?

Gao Liya: Sure! I've often heard Mingwen mention night markets in the US, and I've been wanting to go for a while now.

Chen Fangyi: So, let's meet at Exit 6 of Zhongshan MRT Station at 5 PM the day after tomorrow. Is that convenient for you?

Gao Liya: Sure, I'll be there on time.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: arranging a time and place to meet someone, and being able to politely ask others. (2) The teacher uses the phrase "Are you free/have time?" to have students practice how to make an invitation. (3) The teacher then uses "We'll meet at (time) and (place)." The focus is on practicing "We'll meet." Here, "meet" refers to the act of meeting, but students won't say "We'll meet." This is similar to native speakers' common usage of "See you tomorrow," "See you later," and "See you later."

(4) The teacher should explain the implied meaning of the phrase "Are you available?" Students have learned phrases like "It's convenient to buy things" and "It's convenient to get around," but here it refers to "Are you free?" or "Is the time convenient?" In the workplace or formal occasions, this is a polite and appropriate way of saying it, and students need to know when it is best to use it.

Part Two Texts

(After meeting Chen Fangyi, Gao Liya goes to the night market, looking around as they walk.) Chen Fangyi: Look, that area with lots of shops and stalls is the night market. Gao Liya: Wow! So many people, I didn't expect it to be so lively.

Chen Fangyi: For Taiwanese people, visiting night markets is a popular leisure activity, and most people enjoy it. Gao Liya: Why are night markets so appealing?

Chen Fangyi: Night markets offer a wide variety of snacks, drinks, clothes, and daily necessities. It's convenient to have dinner, a late-night snack, or just shop. Plus, the prices aren't too expensive, so everyone likes it.

(1) This section focuses on describing the situation of night markets, the reasons for their popularity, and Taiwanese people's attitudes towards night markets. (2) The teacher reviews the first sentence: "X is Y...". This statement explains that "X (the place with many shops and vendors) is the Y (night market) that the speaker wants to know about." The teacher uses other example sentences for practice, such as: "A: (There are several drinks) Which drink is papaya milk? B: The yellow one is papaya milk," "A: (Map) Where is Japan? B: Japan is the country north of Taiwan," etc. (3) The teacher asks questions based on the book: "What does visiting a night market mean to Taiwanese people?" "Why are night markets so attractive?" Connecting several grammatical points, the teacher has students practice long sentences from the book. Sentence patterns include: "Because of..., A or B both.... In addition, ..., so no matter..., both...". The teacher provides many different scenarios for students to practice. For example: "Teacher: Why do you often go to that delicious restaurant? Student: Because the food there is pretty good; their fish and roast chicken are delicious. Plus, the prices aren't too expensive, so I like to eat there anytime." "Teacher: You often vacation in Asia, why don't you vacation in Europe? Student: ..."

Guide students to speak in complete, long sentences.

Part Three Texts

Gao Liya: Wow! That vendor's chicken cutlet is huge, bigger than my face! I want to try it! Chen Fangyi: The chicken cutlets at the night market are fried until crispy and crunchy; they're one of the most popular snacks. Gao Liya: Huh! I smell something strange. What is it? Chen Fangyi: It's stinky tofu. Stinky tofu smells stinky, but it doesn't taste stinky at all. Do you dare to try it? Gao Liya: Stinky tofu is so famous, of course I have to try it. Hmm, it's crispy and tastes pretty good. It doesn't smell as bad as it does. No wonder Taiwanese people like it.

Chen Fangyi: That vendor sells papaya milk. It's like bubble tea, and a lot of people like it. Do you want to try it? Gao Liya: I love bubble tea so much. I drink a cup almost every day. Today, I'll have papaya milk.

Chen Fangyi: You can't see everything at the night market in one night. You can come whenever you want in the future, even if you're slow. Take your time strolling around.

(1) The focus of this paragraph is to describe the taste and appearance of the food. Practice this in conjunction with Grammar 5. (2) The teacher will first practice this paragraph using "A is even more than B Vs". This is an extension of the grammar of the "more" construction, adding "even" to indicate a higher degree, similar to the usage of "more". It means "Our face is big, but the chicken cutlet is even bigger than our face." The teacher can easily practice with pictures. Find a hamburger, zoom in on the picture to make it bigger than your hand, and have the students say, "This hamburger is very big/very big, bigger than my hand."

(3) This section of the text integrates the taste and texture of food into the exercises. "How does stinky tofu smell? How does it taste?" "How does bubble tea smell? How does it taste?" The teacher will then find some local food and beverage examples to extend the exercises.

(4) This paragraph uses three grammatical structures for comparison: a. "A is (more/greater) than B"; b. "A is not as good as B"; c. "A is the same as B" (vs). These common grammatical structures can clearly express the results of comparisons. Teachers need to review and practice them repeatedly so that students can make good use of these different expressions to express their own opinions.

(5) The last sentence of this paragraph uses "ÿ……ÿ", which is not the usage of Lesson 2 in Book 3. It indicates emphasis on the focus of "the time, place, people, and manner of the past event". For example: "How did you get there? / Where did you buy that dress?" In this lesson, "ÿ……ÿ" is used to express tone, indicating the speaker's evaluation, narration, or description of the subject. It often carries an affirmative tone that explains the situation, elaborates on the reasoning, and wants the listener to accept or believe it. (Liu Yuehua, Practical Modern Chinese Grammar). Chen Fangyi said, "You can't finish shopping at the night market in one night", which affirms her view that shopping at the night market requires a lot of time. Other examples include: "In Taiwan, bubble tea is very famous / Everyone knows that exercise can make you healthy / It is impossible for people's personalities to be exactly the same". If students have a need to understand the grammar in depth, the teacher should first review the first type of "ÿ……ÿ" sentence, and then take out the one from this lesson to compare the functional differences between the two. (6) Use the sentence "Come whenever you want" to review the grammar of "interrogative words can be used at will" in Lesson 4. This grammar point is not easy to use naturally, so it appears again in this lesson. Teachers can continue to practice it to strengthen students' memory and ability to use it.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) Where did Chen Fangyi invite Gao Liya to go? (2) Where did they meet?

(3) Will Gao Liya be late? (4) What do we see to know we've arrived near the night market? (5) What kind of activity is visiting a night market for Taiwanese people? (6) Chen Fangyi said that night markets are so attractive to Taiwanese people? (7) Are the chicken cutlets sold at the night market big? How big? (8)

How does the chicken cutlet at the night market taste? (9) Gao Liya smells a strange smell, what is it?

(10) Chen Fangyi said how does stinky tofu smell? How does it taste? (11) Does Gao Liya dare to eat stinky tofu? What does she think of the taste? (12) What drinks does Gao Liya say she drinks almost every day? (13) Papaya milk, has Gao Liya tried it? (14) When does Chen Fangyi tell Gao Liya when she can go to the night market again? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (15) Are there any places like night markets in your country/where you live? Please introduce them. (16) What do markets in your country/where you live sell? (17) Do you like going to markets? Why? (18) Have you ever eaten Taiwanese snacks? What have you eaten? Did you think they were delicious? (19) Have you heard of Taiwanese snacks? What have you heard of? What snacks would you like to try? (20) Have you heard of stinky tofu? Do you think you would dare to eat it? (21) What smelly foods are there in your country/where you live? Do you all like to eat?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice narrating the text, so that they can retell the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

Machine Translated by Google

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method: a. Have students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Writing Chinese characters or pinyin can be arranged according to students' levels. d. If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of characters to be written in the text. e. The teacher can reinforce characters that students haven't yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in the lesson), by filling in the blanks in these characters or phrases and having them read or write them again.

3. Reading comprehension

(1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar learned in this lesson to improve comprehension and reading skills. (2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more conducive to identifying characters and understanding sentence meaning in a shorter time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check their comprehension of the passage. c. The teacher can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or ask inference questions not mentioned in the passage.

For example: Do you think foreigners really like Taiwan's night markets?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage.

e. Further discussion based on the content.

4. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2) Method: a. Explain the activity method and remind students of the sentences to be used. b. Have students ask each other questions, and record each other's answers as they ask.

c. The teacher asked the students to report to the class what the students he had interviewed had said.

d. The teacher can also select two students to have a conversation in front of the whole class. e. After the interview, ask the students to describe what they consider snacks in their country.

5. Reading Authentic Materials (1)

Objective: To train students to read authentic materials from daily life. (2) Method:

a. Ask students to look at the pictures in the textbook.

b. Then look at the question and let the students find the answer from the picture themselves.

Machine Translated by Google

c. Teachers can guide students not to pay attention to words they haven't learned yet, but to use clues from words they have already learned to guess or find the answers.

d. Students only need to find the food-related name (corresponding Chinese characters) to answer. For example: (4) How does salt and pepper chicken taste? Because it contains the character "ÿ" (crispy), students can answer "ÿÿÿ" (crispy). If students know the meaning of "ÿ" (salty), they can also say "ÿÿÿ" (salty). Currently in Taiwan, both "salt and pepper chicken" and "ÿÿÿ" (salty and pepper chicken) are used.

e. After reading, the teacher asks students to take turns giving their answers. If any answer is incorrect, the teacher will correct it. Strategy guidance.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

While in the United States, Gao Liya had heard Wang Mingwen mention Taiwan's night markets, which she found very interesting. So, as soon as she arrived in Taiwan, she asked Chen Fangyi to take her to a night market so she could try the snacks she had heard about but never tasted before.

The night market sold all sorts of things, mostly food, but also some practical and fun items. It looked incredibly lively, and there were so many people browsing it. Gao Liya hadn't tried almost any of the various snacks before, so she wanted to try them all. She started with stinky tofu. Many people say stinky tofu smells bad but doesn't taste bad, and she wanted to know if that was true. When the vendor gave Gao Liya the stinky tofu, she thought it really did smell a bit, but once she tasted it, the bad smell was completely gone. The fragrant, crispy fried stinky tofu was really good, in Gao Liya's opinion. Gao Liya spent two hours browsing the night market and wanted to continue. For Gao Liya, Taiwan's night markets were...

It's interesting! There are so many things I've never seen or eaten before. I'll definitely come back to visit again.

Questions: (Please answer with (•/×) or (T / F)) 1. Gao Liya went to the night market

(by herself as soon as she arrived in Taiwan. 2. Gao Liya has tried almost (all the food at the night market. 3. Gao Liya has heard about the smell of (stinky tofu and wants to know if it really smells bad. 4. Although visiting the night market is fun, Gao Liya will not go again.

Lesson Six

Taipei's unique features

I. Learning Objectives

Theme: Urban Landscape

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Describe a city scene in Chinese. 2. Compare the differences between different cities.

3. Explain the conditions of city life.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Prepare several pictures of the city landscape and cityscape of the student's residence. Discuss with the students their opinions on the appearance of their residence and think about what cultural features the residence has besides the visible buildings and attractions. In conjunction with the text, focus on buildings related to history and religion.

2. Find some pictures of the exteriors of famous cities around the world and talk to the students about what they think are the unique features of other cities.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. The vocabulary words related to architecture and religion in this lesson include "architecture, Chinese style, Western style, Japanese style, museum, temple," etc. The teacher uses pictures of Taiwanese architecture (Longshan Temple, National Palace Museum, Dihua Street/Fort San Domingo, Kishu-an/Wisteria Tea House) to illustrate which are "Chinese-style temples/architecture," "Western-style castles/architecture," and "Japanese-style tea houses/architecture," etc. The teacher then adds words such as "traditional," "modern," and "distinctive." The above-mentioned buildings belong to "traditional architecture," and pictures of buildings such as "Taipei 101" and "Taichung Opera House" are used to illustrate "modern architecture." The teacher then guides students to discuss by asking, "What are the distinctive features of these buildings?" Students may not know the architectural features, but they only need to be able to express what they find special.

Machine Translated by Google

2. "Characteristics" is different from the previously learned "special". Students are prone to mistaking the noun "characteristics" for the stative verb "special". Use "ÿ" in the following way: "*Taipei 101 is very unique".

3. The new word "relationship" is a noun in this lesson, and it is mainly practiced using grammar sentence pattern 2, "A and B have a relationship." If students want to use "relationship" alone, they can use "A: What is your relationship? B: We are classmates." to illustrate. More complex usages, such as "Their relationship is complicated" or "Finding a job depends on connections," do not need to be explored further.

4. The measure word "ÿ" (céng) can be practiced using examples from Lesson 3 such as "ŷÿ" (fŷyuè) and "ÿ" (lóu). It's important to distinguish between "ÿ" and "ÿ". For example: "This building has ten floors (ÿ), I live on the fifth floor," and "That apartment building is a five-story apartment building, so..." There is no elevator. You cannot say, "*I live on the fifth floor."

5. Practice the new words "visit" and "appreciate" together. First, "visit" is mostly used in relation to architecture, such as "visit a temple/visit a new house/visit a school/visit a company," and can also refer to visiting "museums, antiquities, (art) exhibitions," etc. When visiting "temples, museums, exhibitions," one will "appreciate" the antiquities, exhibits, temple murals, cultural styles, etc. However, one cannot "appreciate a school, appreciate a new house," as "appreciate" is not used for simply looking at the exterior (appearance) of a building. Therefore, the two words are different. Additionally, "appreciate" can also be used in "appreciate scenery, appreciate someone, appreciate performing arts," etc. These collocations are not easy and depend on the student's level. 6. "Change" is used frequently and requires extensive practice. This lesson will first practice "X (the subject) becomes… (how)." Note that "becomes…" requires the use of "ÿ," and is often followed by "adverb of degree + verb of state," such as "became more beautiful," "became very cold," "became very messy," "became very fat." The teacher uses other scenarios for practice, such as: "It snowed, so how did the weather change?", "How will traffic change during rush hour?", "What will happen to your body if you drink too many sugary drinks?", etc., allowing students to give various results. "Change" can also be directly followed by the changed result, such as: "It's become more beautiful here," "The weather has become colder." In this case, adverbs of degree like "very," "even more," or "extremely" cannot be added, and the sentence must end with "ÿ." There are no standard answers to these questions; whatever the student feels is acceptable.

7. The word "ŷÿ" (worth) is used as an adverb in this lesson, as in "The Forbidden City is worth visiting," and is also commonly used in phrases like "...(the subject matter) is very worthwhile." When practicing, teachers can start with "...is very worthwhile," and then transition to "It's very worthwhile to go to...". The usage of "ŷÿ" is quite broad, so it's best for teachers to practice with more specific contexts first.

8. "Faith" can be used as both a verb and a noun, such as: Many people do not have religious beliefs. 9. The word "phenomenon" is not easy to use; teachers need to practice it more. In this lesson, Gao Liya sees "many people queuing for takeout and meals," a phenomenon that she finds interesting. Using the word "phenomenon" often expresses a generally accepted and commonly observed situation; it is a more abstract and formal usage. It is often described as "...the phenomenon of...". Teachers can ask questions such as: "What phenomena can you see on the road during rush hour?", "Christmas is coming soon; what phenomena can you see in department stores?", "It's incredibly hot in the summer; what phenomena will we see?" Students answer: "During rush hour, we see traffic jams everywhere." Then the teacher can ask: "Is this phenomenon very common?" This reviews the vocabulary word "common" from Lesson 4.

10. The aspect particle "ÿ" (zhe) in Chinese, along with "ÿ" (le) and "ÿ" (guo), is an aspect particle with very important semantic meaning and usage. This lesson only teaches the most basic "continuous state" aspect, which will be practiced together in the grammar section. 11. "ÿ" (luan) can be used in many situations. The teacher can give various examples for practice, such as: traffic is very chaotic, the room is very chaotic, the table is very chaotic, one's mind is very chaotic. "ÿ" can also be used with "ÿ+V", such as: "talking nonsense," "writing nonsense," etc.

Machine Translated by Google

"Making a mess, eating a mess..." This uses "mess" as an adverb, combined with another verb to form a new word. "Mess" can also be used as a complement, such as: "My younger brother messed up the room," "The wind messed up his hair." These two uses of "mess" are not easy, and teachers should not practice them together. Students can try different uses from this lesson only if they have a sufficient level of proficiency.

12. "Takeout" is a commonly heard term in Taiwan; the other is "dine-in." It's used in restaurants, beverage shops, etc. 13. The teacher first reviews the "danger" from Lesson 4, then introduces "not dangerous," which is "safe."

III. Grammar Teaching

1. Completion-to-date with Double ÿ

(1) The sentence pattern "Double ÿ" indicates that the action has been completed up to the present time, and the time period has continued up to the time of speaking. For example, in sentence (1), I have been living in Taiwan for two months. (I still live in Taiwan now). In Lesson 6 of Book 2, "V + ÿ + Time-Duration" uses only one "ÿ" to indicate that the action has been completed and that the time period in the past has passed. For example, in sentence (2), I lived in Taiwan for two months last year. (I do not live in Taiwan now).

(2) The key to practicing this grammar is whether the situation still exists. The teacher asks, "How many years have you worked at Company X?" and the student replies, "I have worked at Company X for 5 years." If the student is still working at the company, they should say, "I have worked at Company X for 5 years," otherwise they should say, "I (used to) work at Company X for 5 years." The teacher asks the student various questions about different aspects of their life to help them use this grammar.

(3) This exercise is best practiced in the form of a question and answer session.

2. A is related to B.

(1) This sentence pattern indicates the relationship between two things. If it is an affirmative sentence, "relationship" can be omitted as "related to", such as in example (1) The rent of the apartment is related to where the apartment is located. (2) A: Why do so many people like to ride motorcycles? B: I think it is related to the convenience of riding motorcycles. The negative is expressed with "no", such as in example (3) This activity has nothing to do with religion.

(2) This exercise is best practiced using the question-and-answer format in the exercise section.

3. V+ particle (auxiliary word)

(1) "ÿ" placed after a verb indicates that the action is in progress. For example, in sentence (1), when the teacher speaks, the students all look at the teacher. (2) Miss Wang is holding a cup of coffee. If "V + ÿ" is placed before the main verb in a sentence, it indicates that the action is performed in the manner/situation of "V + ÿ". For example, in sentence (3), the students sit while the teacher stands while teaching. (4) Li Guocheng runs while listening to music. (2) This grammar is best practiced with pictures. The teacher can show a picture with many people doing different actions, such as: people sitting on the grass having a picnic, some eating sandwiches, some drinking beverages, some playing ball, some talking, etc. Let the students describe these actions while looking at the picture. The teacher can also use movies, comics, etc. that the students are familiar with to describe the various situations and actions of the characters in the movie.

Machine Translated by Google

(3) The difference between “ÿ” and “ÿ”. “ÿ” indicates a static state, so it is easiest to express the action of the person in the picture by using “V + ÿ”. “ÿ” is dynamic, indicating that the action is in progress. The teacher used “ÿÿÿÿ” and “ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ” to distinguish the difference between the two.

4. Compared to B , A

(1) This sentence pattern is used to compare two things. After the comparison, another clause follows to explain the result of the comparison. It can be the situation of A or the situation of B. For example, in sentence (1), there are more people riding motorcycles than riding bicycles. (2) Winters in Taipei are colder than winters in France. If B is mentioned first, then A is in the second sentence, and the result of the comparison must be the situation of A. For example, in sentence (3), beef noodles are more popular than chicken leg bento boxes.

(2) This sentence is a comparison sentence, but it uses a different sentence structure to express the result of the comparison. The teacher asks the students about two different things and asks them to compare them and express their opinions.

5. Longer/Later than expected with ÿ

(1) “ÿ” in a sentence indicates that an event occurs later than expected or takes longer than expected. For example, in sentence (1), you are only arriving now, you are already ten minutes late. (2) Although Gao Liya knew about night markets in Taiwan, she only went to a night market after she arrived. In similar situations, “ÿ” indicates that an event occurs earlier or faster than expected. Compare the two, for example, in sentence (3), I waited for ten minutes before the MRT arrived (I think the MRT arrived a little late). (4) I waited for ten minutes before the MRT arrived (I think the MRT arrived very quickly). (2) The teacher uses various situations related to the time of day to practice. Practicing “ÿ” and “ÿ” at the same time makes it easy for students to feel the difference between a sentence indicating the time of day. (3) The “ÿ” in this lesson is different from the “condition--ÿ” in the fourth lesson. The teacher can review it again to distinguish that many grammatical or word meanings in Chinese have multiple meanings.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. Gao Liya has been living in Taipei for more than four months.

2. Although Gao Liya already knew that Taiwan was different from the United States, she didn't expect that Taipei had so many unique aspects. situation.

3. This is related to Taiwan's history.

4. Looking down from above, the colorful lights make Taipei even more beautiful.

5. There's always a line at the entrance, waiting to go in for a meal or to get takeout drinks. 6. For Taiwanese people, eating delicious food is a very important thing. 7. Compared to many big cities, Taipei is a very safe city.

Machine Translated by Google

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with independent meaning and including important vocabulary and grammar. This is to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part. The teacher presents the first part first, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This helps students understand the meaning and practice reciting the sentences in this part. Then, other questions are used to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar. (3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar within the context of the text. (4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson, use informational questions to extend the discussion, and practice using the key sentences from this lesson.

Part One Text

Gao Liya has been living in Taipei for over four months and has adapted well to both her life and work. Although she knew Taiwan was different from the United States, she hadn't expected Taipei to have so many unique aspects. First, she'd see diverse architecture in Taipei, including Chinese, Japanese, and Western styles, which she'd heard were related to Taiwan's history. Besides traditional buildings, there were also modern ones, the most famous being Taipei 101. Tourists almost always go to the top floor for the view. At night, the colorful lights make Taipei even more beautiful. Taipei also has many places worth visiting, such as museums and temples. In museums, you can see many antiquities. In temples, you can appreciate the characteristics of traditional architecture and learn about Chinese religious beliefs.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is to express the unexpected perspectives that some things bring to people, and also to explain Taipei. The city's appearance and architectural features.

(2) The teacher asks, "Before you went to X (place), what did you imagine that place to be like? After you went, did your impressions change?" The teacher can also use the experiences of students' friends to illustrate the differences between their first impression of their city and their later impressions. The main point is to have students express their thoughts using phrases like "Although..., I didn't expect...". The teacher can also use their own experience to demonstrate how to use these sentences.

(3) The teacher uses pictures to show the buildings in the text, explaining "Chinese style, Japanese style, and Western style", and introducing related architectural vocabulary. These building nouns (Taipei 101, museum, temple) do not need to be written, just spoken. Then, the teacher uses daytime and nighttime photos of Taipei 101 to practice sentences such as "scenery, beauty, lights, colorful, pretty (review), attractive (review)".

Machine Translated by Google

(4) The teacher uses high-rise buildings in the local area, or a world-famous high-rise building, to practice scenes similar to those in this lesson. Colors are so easy to remember and understand.

Part Two Texts

Besides the diverse architecture, another phenomenon that Gao Liya found very interesting was the abundance of restaurants and beverage shops. There were always people queuing outside, waiting to eat or get takeout drinks. This made Gao Liya realize that "eating delicious food" is a very important thing for Taiwanese people.

(1) This section focuses on describing the daily eating and drinking habits of Taiwanese people. The main focus is on teaching the grammar point 3 particle "ÿ". "ÿ" is best used to describe a static state, so this lesson uses a short passage format. (2) The teacher uses pictures of many people queuing at the door to practice sentences such as "customers are waiting to go in to eat" and "they are waiting to take away drinks". Then, the teacher uses pictures of common queues, such as department store sales, buying new mobile phones, buying concert tickets, etc., to ask students to say "they are standing/sitting in line" and "they are queuing to buy discounted items". Students are asked to practice repeatedly how to describe these situations.

(3) The teacher asks, "Is eating delicious food a very important thing to you?" to discuss different people's views on this situation. It can also be extended to "What is a very important thing in your life?"

Part Three Texts

Gao Liya also discovered that Taipei is a very safe city compared to many other big cities. She can go to night markets at night, go drinking with colleagues, and stay out until midnight without any problems. There are many cars on the streets of Taipei, and the traffic is a bit chaotic, but the Taiwanese people are very friendly, and life is very convenient. Gao Liya believes that Taipei is a good city to live in.

(1) The focus of this section is on grammar points 4 and 5. The teacher guides students to discuss their opinions and views on city safety by asking, "Do you think our city is safe?" Whether a city is safe or not is subjective, so there is no standard answer.

(2) The teacher asked students to give examples of a city and explain why it is safe or unsafe. The examples used were: "XX (city) is safe because it allows you to… and also…" and "XX (city) is unsafe because you can't go alone… and you can't go out at night…".

(3) Use the sentence pattern "Although... (There are many cars on the roads in Taipei and the traffic is a bit chaotic), but... (Taiwanese people are very friendly and life is very convenient)" to practice your overall view of a city, apart from the issue of "safety".

(4) Teachers can find some online surveys, such as "The safest city in the world in 2022" and "The most livable city in the world in 2023?", and have students discuss them to see if they agree with the survey results. Because the data is relatively difficult, teachers may need to explain it in their native language or rewrite it.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) How long has Gao Liya lived in Taiwan? (2) After Gao Liya came to Taiwan, did she find that Taiwan was the same as she had imagined?

(3) What special buildings did Gao Liya see in Taipei? Why are there different buildings? (4) What can you see from the top of Taipei 101?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to take turns reading the text aloud.

Machine Translated by Google

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the text, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method: a. Have students fill in the text content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Writing Chinese characters or pinyin can be arranged according to students' levels. d. If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of characters to be written in the text. e. The teacher can reinforce characters that students haven't yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in the lesson), by filling in the blanks in these characters or phrases and having them read or write them again.

3. Please read this article and then answer the following questions.

(1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar of this lesson in order to improve comprehension and reading skills.

(2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more conducive to identifying characters and understanding sentence meaning in a shorter time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check whether they understand the short passage they have read.

c. Teachers can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or they can ask inference questions not mentioned in the passage. For example: If He Xi came to Taiwan, where would Gao Liya take him?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage.

e. Further discussion based on the content.

4. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind you of the sentences to be used.

b. Have students ask each other questions, and complete the form while making the interviews.

c. The teacher asks students to report what the students they interviewed said to the class. d. The teacher can also ask two students to have a conversation in front of the class. e. After completing part (4-2), students are asked to write a short essay about the building they want to introduce.

f. Ask students to memorize their short essays and report them to the class next time, accompanied by pictures or... photo.

5. Reading Authentic Materials (1)

Objective: To train students to read authentic materials from life.

Machine Translated by Google

(2) Method: a. Ask students to look at the pictures in the textbook. b.

themselves. c. The teacher can guide students not to pay attention to words they have not yet learned, but to guess/find the answers using clues from words they have learned. d. Students only need to find the relevant words to answer the question. For example: (1) Seeing "no need to wait" can answer question (1). Knowing "buy one get one free" and "chicken" can lead to the answer to question (3).

e. After reading, the teacher asks students to take turns giving their answers. If any answer is incorrect, the teacher will correct it.

Strategy guidance.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Gao Liya has lived in this apartment for over four months and is very satisfied with it. This is because the apartment is located near... There are convenience stores, supermarkets, and many Chinese and Western restaurants, making it convenient to buy and eat.

One day, Gao Liya was riding her bicycle around when she discovered a small temple about fifteen minutes from her apartment. She went inside and saw many people praying, concluding that there must be quite a few religious people in Taiwan. Gao Liya was interested in Taiwanese history and religion and planned to learn more about them while she was in Taiwan.

In Taiwan, what Gao Liya finds interesting is the frequent sight of people queuing. People always line up when waiting for the MRT. You can also always see people waiting outside famous beverage shops for takeout. She thinks the Taiwanese people's habit of queuing is a good one, making things convenient for everyone.

Cultural Unit (II)

Taipei's cultural attractions

Culture is often the most attractive aspect of a city, and Taipei, having undergone a unique historical process, has developed a rich and fascinating culture. Multiculturalism. We will introduce several representative cultural sites in chronological order of historical development.

Longshan Temple, located in the early developed western district of Taipei, was jointly built in 1738 by immigrants from Fujian. For nearly three centuries, although it has been renovated several times, Longshan Temple has always maintained its traditional palatial architectural style, emphasizing grandeur. It serves not only as a center of faith but also because people believe in the fairness and justice of the divine.

Gradually, it became a place for people to discuss public affairs or resolve disputes; this is also the social function of most temples in Taiwan. Functionality.

The Ximen Red House is located in Taipei's long-standing most bustling western district. Designed by Japanese architect Juro Kondo, it was completed in 1908. The building, composed of an octagonal tower and a cross-shaped tower, is a representative work of red-brick Western-style architecture at the time. Over the past century, the Red House has undergone many changes. Although it has been renovated several times, it has retained its basic original appearance. Functionally, it has transformed from an indoor market into a venue for various performances and cultural and creative markets. It combines popular... Culture, with the Red Mansion as its landmark, has made the Ximen area a popular destination for young people.

The National Palace Museum, Taiwan's most world-renowned museum, opened its main building in 1965. Its collection of nearly 700,000 artifacts, primarily from the imperial collections of the Song, Yuan, Ming, and Qing dynasties, is extensive. Every piece is a masterpiece, and some artifacts are even rare worldwide. In recent years, the museum has leveraged technology to establish the "Online Palace Museum," installing VR and other technological equipment. In addition to viewing the collection online, visitors can also interact with the paintings and calligraphy to experience the works of the ancients.

Taipei may not be large, nor is it the center of the world, but through our cultural heritage and our efforts to breathe new life into ancient cultures, Taipei has earned the respect and love of the world, making it a place of great importance and significance. City.

Lesson 7

Leisure activities that Taiwanese people like

I. Learning Objectives

Theme: Leisure Activities

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Explain popular leisure activities. 2. Explain why leisure activities are popular. 3. Describe your feelings while engaging in leisure activities.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1.

Prepare a few of the most popular sports in your area to spark conversation. For example: "Do you like football?" / "Will you..." Do you play football? / Do you often watch football matches? etc.

2. Prepare a few World Cup events to spark discussion. For example, ask: "Where will the 2024 Olympic Games be held? / Where will the next World Cup be held?" to introduce the topic of this lesson.

3. The practice of going to karaoke (KTV) is mostly found in Asia. The teacher asked the students, "Do you know what karaoke is? / Have you ever been to karaoke? / Even if you haven't been, do you think it's fun to go to karaoke?"

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1.

The new vocabulary in this lesson related to sports includes "football, American football, baseball (review), basketball, team, game, sports field," etc. The teacher will use questions such as "What kind of games do you like to watch? / Do you prefer to watch games on TV at home or go to the sports field? / Which team do you like? / What do you do when watching a game?" to introduce students' favorite sports, teams, and games. If the students' favorite sports are not covered in the textbook,

Machine Translated by Google

The teacher supplemented the Chinese expressions so that students could express their favorite sports, rather than being limited to the sports competitions in the textbook.

2. The new word "sports field" can be replaced with "basketball court," "football field," "baseball field," etc. The teacher may supplement with words such as "stadium" and "gymnasium" as needed. The literal meaning of the Chinese character "ÿÿ" (sports) is difficult to associate, so it will be presented as "sports field" in this lesson.

3. The new words "ÿÿ" and "ÿÿ" are used as adverbs in this lesson. In grammar section 2, the teacher will practice using them together in various contexts. "ÿÿ" can also be used as an attributive, such as "ÿÿÿÿÿ" and "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ". However, its attributive usage is less common, so we will focus on teaching its adverb usage in this lesson first.

4. In this lesson, "ÿ" refers to a person. The teacher can practice using the word "ÿ" by incorporating names of sports, singers, and actors, such as "basketball fan," "football fan," "music fan," and "movie fan." In Taiwan, influenced by the English word "fans," it is directly transliterated into the word "ÿÿ" (fÿnsÿ), which has the same meaning as the word taught in this lesson. "ÿ" can also be used as a verb, such as "ÿÿÿÿ" (mí ÿdài sài, to be obsessed with baseball) and "ÿÿÿÿ" (mí diànjì yóu, to be obsessed with video games). Depending on the students' level, the teacher can practice both meanings by saying, "She's obsessed with baseball, so you could say she's a baseball fan."

5. The complement "V ÿ" was taught in Book 3, and students have already learned "hear". The new word "hear" in this lesson has a similar meaning, except that the complement is "ÿ". Because "ÿ" can only be used as a complement for sensory verbs such as "see" and "hear", such as "see/hear can see", "see/hear cannot see", "see/hear", "did not see/hear", etc., there are fewer verbs that can be used with it. Therefore, this set of books first teaches "V + get/not get". However, "hear/see" is also commonly used.

6. The new word "ÿ" in this lesson has a different meaning from the "ÿ" in "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (What's your name?). Both the action verbs "ÿ" and "ÿ" involve making a loud sound, but there are still differences. "ÿ" implies shouting more forcefully and loudly. They are often used together, such as in "ÿÿÿÿ" (shouting and yelling) in this lesson, and can also mean "ÿÿÿÿ" (shouting loudly).

7. Since both "ÿ" (shÿ) and "ÿ" (yíng) are verbs that change to indicate the final result, they need to be followed by "ÿ" (le) when used, such as "ÿÿÿÿ" (wÿ wÿi le) or "ÿÿÿ" (sài shÿ le). These two words can be used in any context similar to a competition, such as "ball game," "playing games," "business competition," and "gambling." However, "ÿ" does not completely correspond to the English "win." In English, you say "I won the lottery," but in Chinese, you cannot say "ÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (wÿ yí le lè tòu).

8. The word "ÿÿ" (guòyÿn, meaning "enjoyable") is relatively difficult to grasp. Teachers need to provide appropriate scenarios to help students understand when it can be used. For example, "When it's incredibly hot, eating ice cream while enjoying air conditioning feels very enjoyable." Other examples include "watching an exciting game, riding a thrilling roller coaster, or indulging in a delicious meal," all of which bring a sense of comfort and satisfaction, making "ÿÿ" applicable in these situations. 9. "ÿÿÿ" (xiÿngxiòng, meaning "enjoy") is immersing oneself in an environment, feeling satisfied and gaining something. It can be dynamic or static. In this lesson, it's "If you hear someone sing very well, like a pop star, then listening to them sing is enjoyable." Other examples include: "For someone who loves art, appreciating artwork is enjoyable," "For someone who loves good food, having a big meal is enjoyable," and "Climbing a high mountain and enjoying the boundless beauty of the scenery." Teachers provide various scenarios to practice the usage of nouns and verbs. 10. "ÿÿ" (kÿxÿ, meaning "unfortunately") can be used to express "…(something) is very regrettable" or "Unfortunately (something)…". The usage scenario is when someone could have received a benefit or opportunity but missed it for other reasons, and feels regretful. For example, "Gorilla invited us to Thanksgiving dinner, but I have something to do and can't go, what a pity!" or "Gorilla invited us to Thanksgiving dinner, but unfortunately I have something to do and can't go." Sometimes, when invited but unable to attend, the invitee will politely express their regret at missing the opportunity by saying, "I have something to do and can't attend, what a pity!"

11. The phrase "a few days ago" is a vague time term, indicating that the event occurred four or five days before the time of speaking.

It's not far away. If we're talking about the next few days, we should use "in a few days" instead of "the following days".

12. The phrase "ÿÿÿÿ" (zÿnme zhème) is composed of two words: "ÿÿ" (zÿnme) and "ÿÿ" (zhème). "ÿÿ" means "why," while "ÿÿ" indicates degree. Therefore, when used together, it expresses a sense of bewilderment at the high degree of the subject matter, while also emphasizing the high level of intensity. Examples: "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (zÿnme xià xiè zÿme zhème mÿime rè), "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (yèshì rén zÿme zhème mÿime zhème mÿime).

III. Grammar Teaching 1. Never

+ never/Never + Verb

(1) The phrase “never + never” indicates that the speaker or subject has never had the experience of the thing being said (the event has never happened). The verb must be followed by “guo” to be used together, as in example (1) Mr. Li has never drunk alcohol. “Never + never” indicates that it generally does not happen, as in example (2) For health reasons, Mr. Li never drinks drinks that are too sweet.

(2) To practice this sentence pattern, teachers simply need to ask students about situations they frequently encounter or do in their daily lives, and then have them answer. Teachers need to know some of the students' habits and backgrounds to easily find situations where students can answer negatively. For example: "Do you drink alcohol? Will you drive after drinking? / Do you know which religions don't eat meat? / Do you play computer games? / Do you watch sports games?" Let students answer these questions independently. If the students' answers are affirmative, this grammar rule cannot be used.

The teacher can accept their answers and then ask questions in a different context.

(3) Using interactive questions similar to those in the textbook exercises makes it easier to practice.

2. Originally..., Later/Now... (1) "Originally" indicates the situation before an event, which must have happened in the past. The second sentence then describes the situation or result after the event. The second sentence can be connected by time adverbs such as "now" or "later". If "later" indicates that the events all happened in the past, such as in example (1): I didn't understand American football at first, but later I learned how to win. If "now" indicates the situation at the time of speaking, such as in example (2): Everyone was looking at their phones at first, but now everyone is listening attentively to the teacher. (2) This sentence pattern is easy to confuse students because the events all happened in the past.

Therefore, it is better for teachers to present it by drawing a timeline. For example: "---(originally)---, (later)---, (now)---".

(3) Practice using various past events, asking students about their previous plans and things they wanted to do, and what happened afterward. For example: "You were going to travel to Asia, did you go?", "You were very satisfied with that company, what about now?", "You didn't like eating vegetables before, why did you become a vegetarian?"

3. As long as..., then...

(1) Sentences with the conjunction "if only" indicate that a certain condition is required. If this condition is met, then the following sentence will present a result, introduced by the adverb "then".

Machine Translated by Google

As a result. The subject can be placed after "as long as", as in example (1) As long as I go to the night market, I will eat stinky tofu. It can also be placed before "as long as", as in example (2) As long as you visit the museum, you will see historical artifacts. If placed in the second sentence, it must be before "then". As in example (3) As long as my favorite team loses the game, I will be very angry.

(2) Teachers can ask students questions with certain conditions, and students can use this grammar by stating the condition. For example: "Can you leave work on time today?", "Does your boss often yell at people?", "Where can I learn to roast a turkey if I want to learn?", and so on.

4. (On) NP

(1) "On NP" means the time and space range contained in this NP, and the content related to NP. NPs are mostly abstract words, such as world, life, habit, society, culture, etc. The "zai" in "zai...shang" can be omitted.

(2) The word "ÿ" in this lesson has been simplified; it doesn't literally mean "above" or "on top." It's different from phrases like "on the table," "on the television," or "on the car." "On the table" means "above the table," but the word "on" is omitted. (3) This grammar point is frequently used in written and more formal spoken language, but students may not easily know which words can be paired with "ÿ." Therefore, it's recommended that teachers practice only the commonly used collocations that appear in this lesson. These collocations are sufficient for students to speak correctly on many topics. (4) The teacher can ask questions like, "Have you gotten used to life here since you moved?", "Do you know the differences in eating habits between Asians and Americans?", "What are the similarities in culture between the United States and the United Kingdom?", and "What differences do you think there are between men and women in their ideas about marriage?"

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The following points are the key learning points of this lesson) 1. I have never watched a baseball game before. 2. I didn't like watching it at first, but my boyfriend is a baseball fan and he would ask me to watch whenever there was a game.

Later, I gradually came to like watching it. 3. I know that the most popular sport in the world is football. 4. Watching a game, shouting and yelling, is very exciting. 5. Whether my favorite team wins or loses, watching a game is a very interesting leisure activity.

6. Drinking and chatting at the same time helps you temporarily forget the stress of work.

7. Why do Taiwanese people love to sing so much?

8. It's such a pity I can't go with you!

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with its own independent dialogue, including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part initially. The teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, other questions are used to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar. (3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar within the context of the text. (4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson, use informational questions to extend the discussion, and practice using the key sentences from this lesson.

Part One Text

Chen Fangyi: Liya, it's Fangyi. Do you want to go to a baseball game this weekend? Gao Liya: I've never watched one before. I didn't know you liked baseball. Chen Fangyi: I didn't like watching it at first, but my boyfriend is a baseball fan, and he always asks me to go whenever there's a game.

Later, I gradually came to enjoy watching it.

Gao Liya: He Xi and I often go to watch sports games. I like watching tennis, and he likes watching American football.

Ball game.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: asking others about their interest in watching sports games and explaining one's own preferences.

The reason for exercise.

(2) The teacher asks, "Have you watched any games? What games have you watched?" Then, the teacher asks, "Did you like watching this sport before?", "If you didn't like it before, why did you like it later?", "How much do you like watching XX game?". The teacher uses these questions to introduce the topic of this paragraph.

(3) Based on the students' answers, the teacher discusses various sports competitions not mentioned in the textbook. This topic should be popular, as most people know or have watched various World Cup matches, regardless of whether they like a particular sport or not.

(4) Gao Liya said, "I didn't expect you to like watching baseball games." Although this sentence may presuppose that "she finds it strange or unbelievable," Gao Liya and Chen Fangyi have not known each other for long and are not very close friends. It is highly likely that she did not know that Chen Fangyi liked watching baseball games. Therefore, this sentence does not carry an impolite presupposition.

Machine Translated by Google

Part Two Texts

Chen Fangyi: I know that soccer is the most popular sport in the world, but in Taiwan, baseball and basketball are more popular. Gao Liya: I passed by a sports field the other day and heard a lot of people shouting "Go! Go!" inside. Was it a baseball game? Chen Fangyi: It probably was.

Watching a game, shouting and cheering, is really exciting. Whether your favorite team wins or loses, watching sports is a very enjoyable recreational activity.

Goria: Us too.

(1) This section focuses on explaining the sports that Taiwanese people like, as well as the sports that people in other countries like. (2) The teacher uses questions such as: "What is the most popular sport in your country?", "Do people in your country like to watch the games of this sport?", "Are there many people in your country who can play soccer/basketball/baseball/American football?", and "Do people in your country just like to watch the games, or do they participate in the games?" to discuss the sports that people in each country/region like. (3) The teacher asks questions such as: "When you watch a game, do you shout and yell?", "When you watch a game, what do you prepare to eat and drink?", "Where do you like to watch the game? Who do you watch the game with?", "What do you do if your favorite team loses/wins?", and "Many soccer fans get very angry when their national team loses. Do you think this is good?". The teacher uses various situations that occur when watching games and the behavior of fans to discuss these topics.

Part Three Texts

Gao Liya: (We are too.) Besides watching football games, we also like to go to bars with friends for drinks on weekend nights. Drinking and chatting at the same time can help you temporarily forget the pressure of work.

Chen Fangyi: Going to bars for drinks isn't that common in Taiwan; more people prefer to sing at karaoke. Gao Liya: I often hear my colleagues mention going to karaoke. Why do Taiwanese people love singing so much?

Chen Fangyi: Singing your favorite pop songs at karaoke can really relax you. Also, If someone sings very well, listening to them sing is a pleasure.

Gao Liya: I can't sing Chinese songs, so it's a pity I can't go with you! Chen Fangyi: There are foreign songs in the karaoke room too, both English and Japanese.

Gao Liya: Really? That's great. I'll go to a karaoke bar sometime.

(1) This section focuses on leisure activities outside of ball games. The teacher asks students to explain what other leisure activities are most popular.

(2) The teacher posed the question, "Besides watching games, what else do people in your country like to do?" to guide students to the leisure activities that adults typically enjoy on Friday nights or weekends. The textbook examples of "going to bars for drinks" and "going to karaoke" are just examples; their purpose is simply to introduce the Taiwanese people's fondness for karaoke and then lead to other activities. Since there are significant differences between countries/regions, students can simply share their own common leisure activities.

(3) The teacher can find some photos and videos of KTVs to introduce what it is like to sing in a KTV.

Machine Translated by Google

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) What does Chen Fangyi want to do with Gao Liya? (2) Does Gao Liya know that Chen Fangyi likes to watch sports?

(3) Did Chen Fangyi originally like watching baseball games? Why did she start watching them later? (4) What kind of games does Gao Liya like to watch? What about He Xi? (5) What is the most popular ball game in the world? (6) What sport is popular in Taiwan? (7) What did Gao Liya hear as she passed a sports field? (8) What did Chen Fangyi say was the most enjoyable thing to do while watching a game? (9) What activities does Gao Liya do on Friday nights in the United States? (10) What are the benefits of going to a bar to drink, Gao Liya said? (11) Why do Taiwanese people like to go to KTV to sing, Chen Fangyi said? (12) Did Gao Liya originally think that KTV only sang Chinese songs? What happened later?

(13) Will Gao Liya go to KTV to sing in the future? ÿ Answer according to your own situation:

(Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions)

(14) What kind of competitions do you like to watch? Why?

(15) Which team are you a fan of? (16) Which team do you like the most? Which player/athlete? (17) What do you prepare to eat or drink when watching a game? (18) Do you prefer to watch the game at the stadium or at home? Why? (19) What do you do if your favorite team loses? (20) Do you curse the players while watching the game?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly... Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to read the dialogue aloud in turn.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method: a. Have students fill in the dialogue content.

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Writing Chinese characters or pinyin can be arranged according to students' levels. d. If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of characters to be written in the text. e. The teacher can reinforce characters that students haven't yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in the lesson), by filling in the blanks in these characters or phrases and having them read or write them again.

3. Please read this article and then answer the following questions.

(1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar of this lesson in order to improve comprehension and reading skills.

(2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more conducive to identifying characters and understanding sentence meaning in a shorter time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check whether they understand the short passage they have read.

c. The teacher can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or inference questions not mentioned in the passage. For example: When singing at a karaoke bar, you can eat and drink at the same time. Do you find that strange?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage.

e. Further discussion based on the content.

4. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind you of the sentences to be used.

b. Have students ask each other questions, and complete the form while making the interviews.

c. The teacher asks students to report what the students they interviewed said to the whole class. d. The teacher can also ask two students to have a conversation in front of the whole class. e. After completing part (4-2), students are asked to write a short essay based on their favorite sport.

f. Ask students to memorize the short essay they wrote and report it to the class next time.

5. Reading Authentic Materials (1)

Objective: To train students to read authentic materials from life.

Machine Translated by Google

(2) Method: a. Ask

students to look at the pictures in the textbook. b.

themselves. c. The teacher can guide students not to pay attention to words they have not yet learned, but to guess/find the answers using clues from words they have learned. d. Students only need to find the relevant words to answer the question. For example, seeing "XX University" can answer question (1), and knowing "basketball" can answer question (2). Question (4) "Students of this school may freely enter", the key is "free", which may be difficult to guess. The teacher should explain and guide them slowly.

e. After reading, the teacher asks students to take turns giving their answers. If any answer is incorrect, the teacher will correct it.

Strategy guidance.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Last Friday night, Gao Liya and I went to a bar. Many people were drinking while watching an American football game on the bar's TV. I didn't understand American football at all before, but Gao Liya explained to me how a win is determined, and now I can understand a little bit. Compared to other sports, the uniforms worn by American football players are very unique. I found American football to be very different from the football I like. Gao Liya got very nervous when her team was about to lose and kept shouting "Go! Go!" People in the bar who liked American football also cheered for their team. I never expected people to be so excited while watching a sporting event. My boyfriend and I both love football; it's the most popular sport in the world, and we know the teams and players very well. If our favorite team plays, we definitely have to watch it. During the World Cup, which happens every four years, we follow the games closely every day. Unfortunately, football isn't very good in Taiwan, so we don't have the opportunity to see important matches in person. Taiwanese people prefer baseball and basketball. I also like baseball, and watching a baseball game at the stadium is much more interesting than watching it on TV at home. Everyone cheered together, and watching our favorite team win was truly exhilarating.

Question: (Please answer with (•/×) or (T / F))

(1. Gao Liya and I went to a bar for drinks to watch the game. 2. Although I (don't understand American football, I think it's similar to soccer. 3. The people in the bar were drinking (and cheering for their teams. 4. There are more opportunities to watch baseball (games than soccer games in Taiwan.

Lesson 8

Attending a wedding ceremony

I. Learning Objectives

Theme: Wedding Ceremony

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Explain Chinese wedding customs. 2. Describe a wedding ceremony. 3. Understand the taboos surrounding gift-giving in Chinese culture.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Prepare several Taiwanese wedding invitations and red envelopes to show the students. If you can't find the actual items, you can search for wedding invitation images online and show the students the differences between Taiwanese wedding invitations and wedding invitations from their place of residence.

2. Use wedding invitations to introduce the theme of this lesson, and briefly talk about the way and customs of getting married in your place of residence.

3. At this point, only observe the differences in the appearance of the wedding invitations; the content of the invitations will be learned together in the later comprehensive activities.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. The new words in this lesson are grouped together with those related to wedding ceremonies: "attend, wedding ceremony (wedding), wedding invitation, bride, groom, drink wedding wine," etc. The teacher asks questions such as, "Have you ever attended a wedding ceremony? / Whose wedding have you attended? / Was it the bride or groom who invited you to the wedding? / In Taiwan, the bride and groom use wedding invitations to invite friends to the wedding, what about here?" Then, the teacher explains that "in Taiwan, attending a wedding can also be said as going to drink wedding wine," illustrating that people generally use "drink wedding wine" instead of "attend a wedding." Besides "drink wedding wine," "eat wedding wine" is also correct; the phrase "eat wedding wine" appears in Kong Shangren's "The Peach Blossom Fan" from the Qing Dynasty. (Education)

2. The term "both parties" can be used to refer to both sides, such as in "Both parties are very satisfied with this wedding." Other titles/personal pronouns can also be added, such as in "Both sets of parents have already met. / The wedding ceremony requires the agreement of both the bride and groom."

3. "Received" differs from the previously learned "received" and "received (to)". "Received" is used with phrases like "received a wedding invitation", "received a gift", "received an email (letter)", and "received a notification", all of which are more concrete things. "Received" is used with phrases like "received help", "received benefits", "received an opportunity", and "received a harvest", which are more abstract situations. "Received" is used with phrases like "received a phone call", "received a letter", and "received someone at the airport", mostly of concrete things. "Received" and "received" can sometimes be used interchangeably when referring to more concrete things. 4. The new words "package" and "red envelope" are easy to understand. Note that "red envelope" can only be used with the verb "package", which is somewhat special. Then practice "How much should be included in a red envelope?". Next, add "numbers, even numbers, odd numbers (supplement)". The teacher needs to explain what "even numbers" in a red envelope mean. Four thousand and two thousand four hundred are even numbers, but red envelopes cannot contain these numbers. Then introduce the word "lucky". "Lucky" is used because the Chinese character is simpler and has a wider range of uses. The teacher adds words such as "auspicious," "unfortunate," or "bad luck" depending on the student's situation.

5. The vocabulary word "ancient" in this lesson can be practiced together with "modern" and "traditional" from Lesson 6. The teacher will give examples of word collocations to illustrate the difference between "ancient" and "traditional." "Traditional" mainly refers to "customs, ideas, culture, art, practices, etc., since ancient times," and can continue into the "modern era," while "ancient" refers to an "era" far removed from the present. Different "eras" have different cultures, customs, traditions, ideas, etc. 6. "Detailed" is different from the previously learned "careful." "Detailed" means explaining the process and steps of something clearly, paying attention to all details. "Careful," on the other hand, means paying attention to whether each part is completed correctly, being very careful not to make mistakes. Sometimes the two can be used interchangeably, but the emphasis is different. For example, "explain carefully" and "explain in detail" are both acceptable. However, replacing "carefully check every little detail" with "check in detail..." is inappropriate.

7. The words "complex" and "simple" have opposite meanings, making them easier to learn when practiced together. Both have a wide range of applications, and teachers often provide examples of words that can be paired with them for practice. For instance: "Roasting a turkey is complex, making a sandwich is simple," "Taipei's MRT lines are simple, New York's subway lines are complex," "Religious ceremonies are complex, graduation ceremonies are simple," etc.

8. The word "emphasize" is frequently used and can be applied to many aspects of life. Examples include: "emphasize traditional culture," "emphasize education," "emphasize family," "emphasize others' opinions," "emphasize social issues," and "emphasize leisure life." It is often used in abstract contexts. However, it is not appropriate to use it in everyday life, such as: "emphasize eating" or "emphasize clothing."

9. "ÿÿ" leans more towards "ÿÿ" (mind/concern), indicating whether one values something highly or takes it to heart. It's often used in phrases like, "A: Do you care if your place is far from the MRT station? B: I don't care, as long as it's cheap." or "I don't care if the clothes I wear are fashionable."

10. The "ÿ" in this lesson does not mean "to recognize" or "to know," but rather "to distinguish." It can be used not only in the sense of "distinguish." "To recognize a person" can also be used to "to distinguish between the true and false of things".

11. Practice "dressing up, formal, and casual" together. Regarding clothing, "formal" and "casual" are semantically opposites. This lesson will focus only on "dressing up" and "clothing." Further explanation of related meanings will depend on the students' level. The teacher will ask questions such as, "What do you consider formal? What clothes would you consider casual?", "Do you like dressing up? / When do you definitely dress up nicely? / For you, who..."

Machine Translated by Google

Who dresses very well? / Who often dresses very poorly? The vocabulary words "handsome" and "beautiful" can be practiced together with "dress up," such as "dressed very handsomely" and "looking very handsome."

12. The contrast between "host" and "guest" is easy to understand. Add "thank you" and "blessings" for practice. "The host thanks the guests who attended the wedding, and the guests offer blessings to the host, bride, and groom." The teacher then asks, "What blessings do you say to the bride and groom in your country? What do you wish them well?" and "In your country, how does the host express gratitude to the guests attending the wedding? What do they do?"

13. At a wedding, "toasting" is an essential phrase. In Taiwan, it's customary to say "Cheers!" when toasting. The teacher can supplement with "Cheers!" as needed. The expressions for "toasting" and "Cheers!" differ from many other countries, so the teacher can substitute with expressions from their place of residence to practice how to toast at a Chinese wedding in a similar setting. 14. The phrase "May you have a long and happy marriage and many children" is simple in meaning and easy for students to understand. "May you have many children" can be illustrated with pictures: "red dates (early), peanuts (birth), longan (precious), lotus seeds (seeds)." The teacher can supplement with other blessings as needed.

III. Grammar Teaching 1.

Starting from...

(1) The sentence pattern “from…” indicates the starting point of an event, such as in example (1): The company asks everyone not to work overtime starting from the first of next month. This usage is more formal and written. In spoken language, “from…” is used, such as in example (2): He has been riding a bicycle to school since middle school.

(2) This sentence pattern is easy to understand and say. As long as you keep asking students questions in time-related situations and let them say the time it takes to complete the task, you can achieve the purpose of the exercise. For example, the exercises in the textbook.

2. Especially

(1) The adverb "especially" is used to indicate the one that stands out particularly among all the things being discussed, or the one that is desired after comparison. It emphasizes that one thing. It's usually used in the latter part of a sentence.

(2) The teacher asks students questions in a situational context, allowing them to practice sentence patterns. For example: "You like many sports, what's your favorite?", "What's fun at Disneyland?", "What do people like to do when they go to the night market?". Students answer: "I like all kinds of ball sports, especially soccer." (3) If "especially" is followed by a noun,

"especially" should be used, such as: "I like night market snacks, especially fried chicken." If it is a sentence, only "especially" can be used. For example: "I don't like eating out, especially not eating snacks at the night market."

3. Even...and...

(1) “Even...and also…” indicates emphasis, highlighting the following thing, and can be followed by “all” or “also”. When “even...and also…” is used, the situation emphasized has an implied meaning. For example, in sentence (2), he is very good at cooking, he can even cook French food. (Implication: “French food is not easy to cook, but he can cook it”).

Machine Translated by Google

(3) He can't do anything, not even make a sandwich. (Implication: "Making a sandwich is easy, but he can't do it").

(2) The "lian..." structure can be followed by a simple noun, a sentence, or a quantifier, such as "There is not a single person in the school." Teachers only need to practice the usage in this lesson.

(3) This grammar point has implicit meanings, so be careful when using it to discuss matters related to students. For example, saying something like, "Even she can write this character, and you can't?" might be interpreted by a sensitive student as the teacher implying that the student is stupid. Also, avoid situations that belittle other cultures or customs. For example, saying something like, "In our country, even children know who XX is, don't you know?"

4. V + get/not + complete

(1) When "come out" is the complement of a sensory verb or a cognitive verb, it indicates that an event has been discovered or understood through a sensory cognitive process. It can be possible, such as in example (1): Can you tell if there is no meat in this bun? It can also be completed, such as in example (2): I can't tell if he is speaking French or German. (3) Ms. Chen's boyfriend is not happy, and she can tell right away. (4) I didn't recognize that the gentleman in the black clothes was Manager Wang. (2) This grammar is best practiced with two similar pictures to express "can you tell/can't tell". For example, exercise (2).

The teacher then takes a pair of pictures of twins and asks the students: "Can you tell which one is the older brother?" Then practice "can you tell/can't tell", "can you tell/can't tell", and "can you tell/can't tell".

"Can I recognize it/Can't I recognize it", etc.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line is the key point of this lesson)

1. I received Ms. Huang's wedding invitation; she invited me to her wedding ceremony. 2. The gifts must be in even numbers, and the number "four" is not allowed. 3. In Taiwan, "four" is not a lucky number. 4. Wedding customs have been very complicated since ancient times.

5. Times have changed, and traditional customs have become increasingly simpler. Young people, in particular, don't care much about traditional customs anymore.

6. Miss Huang looks beautiful in her wedding dress, and the groom is very handsome too.

7. Even my colleagues were dressed differently than usual; I could hardly recognize them. 8. You can't be too casual when attending a wedding; we all dress up a bit formally.

Machine Translated by Google

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with its own independent dialogue, including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part initially. The teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, other questions are used to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar. (3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar within the context of the text. (4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of this lesson, use informational questions to extend the discussion, and practice using the key sentences from this lesson.

Part One Text

Gao Liya: Guocheng, I received Miss Huang's wedding invitation. She invited me to her wedding ceremony.

Li Guocheng: I received it too. Will you be attending the wedding? Gao Liya:
I've never attended a Chinese wedding before, of course I will. Should I give a gift or a red envelope?

Li Guocheng: Giving gifts is fine, but most people give red envelopes. Gao Liya: Then I'll give a red envelope too. I heard that you have to pay attention to the number when giving a red envelope, is that right? Li Guocheng: Yes, it must be an even number, and it can't contain the number "four". Gao Liya: I already knew that. In Taiwan, "four" is not a lucky number.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: asking about how to give gifts at someone else's wedding, and the custom of giving red envelopes in Chinese culture. (2) The teacher first asks students about their experiences attending the weddings of local friends and colleagues. The teacher asks: "Do you often attend wedding ceremonies?", "Whose wedding ceremony did you attend recently?", "What gift did you give at your friend's wedding ceremony?", "Was your friend's wedding ceremony lively?"

(3) The teacher then focuses the topic on attending Taiwanese weddings, asking questions such as, "Have you ever attended a Taiwanese wedding ceremony?", "Do you know the customs of Taiwanese/Chinese weddings?", "Do you give a gift or a red envelope when you attend a Taiwanese wedding ceremony?", "Was the wedding ceremony you attended lively?", and "What do you think are the differences between Taiwanese weddings and those here?" If students have never attended a Chinese wedding, the teacher can use the wedding customs of their place of residence as a comparison and explanation.

(4) The amount in the red envelope should be an even number, and also a number favored by Taiwanese people, such as 2, 6, or 8. There is no fixed amount; it depends on the closeness of the participant's relationship with the newlyweds. The closer the relationship, the better.

Machine Translated by Google

The larger the red envelope, the better. Sometimes it also depends on whether you're attending alone or with family. Currently in Taiwan, typical workplace wedding red envelopes range from NT$1200, NT$1600, NT$2000, NT$2200, NT$2600, NT$3600, NT$6000, and NT$6600. If it's a relative, they'll give even more. Please refer to the article "How to Give Red Envelopes" on Parenting. https://www.parenting.com.tw/article/5092124

Part Two Texts

Gao Liya: (I already knew that "four" is not a lucky number in Taiwan.) What other customs are there when Taiwanese people get married?

Li Guocheng: Wedding customs have been very complex since ancient times. I'll explain them to you in detail another day. Gao Liya: I passed by a shop and saw many wedding photos. Most of the couples were wearing Western-style wedding attire. Taiwanese people nowadays... Don't like the traditional way anymore?

Li Guocheng: Some families still value tradition, but times have changed, and these traditional customs have become increasingly simple. Young people, in particular, don't care much about traditional customs anymore.

(1) This section focuses on wedding customs. Weddings in each country have unique cultures and complex ceremonies. This is just a starting point, and the depth of discussion will be determined as needed.

(2) Taking wedding photos in Taiwan has become a unique culture, even an industry. Teachers can find wedding photos and street scenes of wedding photography districts in Taiwan to introduce to students. In addition, ask students if their culture has similar ways of creating wedding memories.

(3) Besides the fact that "four is not a lucky number," the teacher can introduce several customs or taboos related to weddings. These may have been simplified in modern times, but some families still follow them, and they can be introduced as cultural characteristics. For example: Who cannot attend the wedding even if they receive a wedding invitation? The meaning behind throwing a fan (splashing water) when a daughter leaves her parents' home. Why is a rice sieve placed on the head when the groom goes to pick up the bride (when she leaves her parents' home)?

(4) Refer to the introduction in Unit 3 of the Culture section. Introduce some traditional customs with pictures. (5) Refer to the website resource links and select a few representative customs that are easy for students to understand to introduce. (6) Ask students to talk about the wedding customs in their countries, whether there are any similarities with Taiwanese weddings, and whether they find Taiwanese customs strange.

Part Three Texts

(At the wedding ceremony)

Gao Liya: Look, Miss Huang looks so beautiful in her wedding dress, and the groom is handsome too. Even my colleagues are dressed differently than usual; I almost can't recognize them.

Li Guocheng: You can't be too casual when attending a wedding, so we all dress up a bit formally. Gao Liya: I didn't expect weddings in Taiwan to be so lively! Why do both sets of parents and the bride and groom come to toast? Li Guocheng: Toasting is the host's way of expressing gratitude, and guests can also use this time to offer their blessings. Gao Liya: Let's all wish them a long and happy marriage and many children!

(1) The key points of this paragraph are grammar points 3 and 4, which describe the appearance of the bride and groom and the wedding guests.

Machine Translated by Google

(2) The teacher will ask questions such as "What kind of clothes do you wear to a wedding?", "Is it necessary to wear such formal clothes?", "Do you dress up nicely?", "After dressing up, is it possible for someone not to be recognized? Have you ever had such an experience?" to discuss wedding attire. (3) The teacher will then ask questions such as "Do you drink alcohol at weddings in your country? Do you drink a lot of alcohol?", "Besides drinking alcohol, do you sing and dance at weddings?", "Are weddings in your country very lively?", "What blessings do you say to the bride and groom at your wedding?" (4) If any students are already married, it would be even better to ask them to talk about their wedding.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example Questions: (Teaching questions, based on textbook content, to check students' understanding) (1) Whose wedding invitation did Gao Liya receive? (2) Did Li Guocheng tell Gao Liya to give a gift or a red envelope? (3) Did Gao Liya know how to wrap a red envelope? (4) What does the number "four" represent for Chinese people? (5) Did Li Guocheng say that wedding customs are complicated? (6) Gao Liya saw that most Taiwanese people were wearing Western-style dresses in their wedding photos. What did she think? (7) How did Gao Liya see her colleagues dressed at the wedding? (8) Why did Gao Liya say she couldn't recognize her colleagues? (9) What did Gao Liya say the bride and groom looked like? (10) What did Li Guocheng say about how one should dress for a wedding? (11) Why did the bride and groom toast everyone? (12) What does it mean when both sets of parents toast everyone? (13) What can the wedding guests say when the bride and groom toast everyone? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (14) Have you ever attended a Chinese wedding? Did you find it interesting? (15) If you have attended a Chinese wedding, what do you think is the most special thing? (16) Are wedding ceremonies in your country complicated? Do most people follow these customs? (17) What must you do when you get married in your country? What can't you do?

(18) Are modern wedding customs in your country the same as traditional ones? (19) Do you prefer modern or traditional weddings? Why? (20) Please describe one of the most interesting wedding customs in your country.

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, and then have them read the text aloud individually in turn, while correcting their pronunciation.

7. Have students complete narration exercises based on the text, aiming to enable them to retell the key points of the text in a storytelling style. In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...
Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method:

a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups. b. The teacher calls on students to take turns reading the dialogue aloud.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method:

a. Have students fill in the dialogue. b. The teacher calls on students to read aloud or write down the answers.

c. Write Chinese characters or pinyin, depending on the student's level.

d. If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters to be practiced in the text.

e. Teachers can reinforce the Chinese characters that students have not yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in this lesson), by filling in the blanks in these Chinese characters and words, and having them read or write them again.

3. Please read the article and then answer the following questions: (1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar learned in this lesson to improve comprehension and reading skills. (2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more conducive to identifying characters and understanding sentence meaning in a shorter time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check whether they understand the short passage they have read.

c. Teachers can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or they can ask inference questions not mentioned in the passage.
For example: Why did Gao Liya say that her colleagues had become more lively?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage. e.

4. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind students of the sentences to be used. b. Have students ask each other questions, completing the table as they do so.

Machine Translated by Google

c. The teacher asked the students to report to the class what the students he had interviewed had said.

d. The teacher can also select two students to have a conversation in front of the whole class.

5. Oral report

(1) Objective: To enable students to report on wedding customs that they are familiar with.

(2) Method: Choose one of the topics, go home to prepare first, and report to the classroom next time.

Question (1) In your country's wedding customs or ceremonies, choose one part that you think is the most important or the most distinctive and report to everyone, explaining why you think it is important or distinctive.

Question (2) Choose a wedding you have attended and tell everyone about the most touching or interesting part of that wedding.

6. Reading authentic materials

(1) Objective: To train students to read real-life materials.

(2) Method:

a. Ask students to look at the pictures in the textbook. b. Then look at the questions and let students find the answers from the pictures themselves. c. The teacher can guide students not to pay attention to words they have not yet learned, but to guess/find the answers using clues from words they have learned. d. Students only need to find the relevant words to answer. For example, seeing "time, address" can answer questions (1) and (4). e. Questions (2) and (3) are more difficult to guess, which is also interesting. This wedding invitation shows that Chinese weddings are not just a matter for the newlyweds, but a major event for two families. Generally, the parents of both sides sign invitations to relatives and friends. The teacher guides the discussion with questions, such as: "There are so many names on the wedding invitation, who is getting married?", "Eldest son, second daughter" means "a boy and a girl, are they the bride and groom?", "These four names on the wedding invitation should be related to the newlyweds, right? Who do you think they are?", "Do you know what Wen Hua's surname is?"

f. After reading, the teacher asks students to take turns giving their answers. If any answer is incorrect, the teacher will correct it.

Strategy guidance.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

Gao Liya was thrilled to receive a wedding invitation from her colleague, as she finally had the chance to attend a Chinese wedding. She knew she should give a red envelope (containing money) and that the number "four" was inappropriate, but she wasn't sure how much to give. She asked Li Guocheng, who told her that her relationship with the bride and groom was very important when giving a red envelope. He suggested giving more if the recipient was a relative, old friend, or very good classmate, but less if they were just colleagues. Gao Liya hadn't realized that the amount for a red envelope could be so complicated.

On the day of the wedding, Gao Liya noticed that all her colleagues were dressed very formally; the men looked handsome, and the women even more beautiful. She understood that Taiwanese people valued attire for weddings and that being too casual was unacceptable. She discovered that the bride and groom looked absolutely stunning in their formal attire, almost unrecognizable to her.

At the start of the wedding ceremony, both sets of parents first offer their blessings to the bride and groom, followed by words of thanks for attending. Some young people will also share how they met and decided to get married. After the wedding banquet begins, everyone enjoys the food and chats in a lively atmosphere. After several courses, the bride and groom, along with their parents, toast the newlyweds, and guests offer their blessings. Near the end of the wedding, the bride and groom stand at the door to see off the guests, thanking them for attending the ceremony. Relatives and friends take photos with the bride and groom, creating lasting memories.

Question: (Please answer with (•/×) or (T / F))

(1. Gao Liya already knows how much money should be in the red envelope. 2. Gao Liya's red envelope doesn't need to be as large as the bride's relatives'. 3. Her colleagues

(4. Some brides and grooms will introduce how they met during the ceremony. 5. Towards the end of the

Lesson 9

Taiwan's indigenous peoples

I. Learning Objectives

Subject: Indigenous Peoples

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Explain the general situation of Taiwan's indigenous peoples. 2. Introduce the culture of Taiwan's indigenous peoples. 3. Describe cultural things that interest you.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1. Prepare several pictures of indigenous people wearing traditional clothing, and then ask the students if they know what they are and why. Are they different from the Taiwanese people we usually see? What ethnic group in Taiwan might they be?

2. The teacher used the official website of the Council of Indigenous Peoples of Taiwan to display pictures and videos of indigenous peoples, allowing students to understand the differences in appearance and dress between Taiwan's indigenous peoples and the Taiwanese people they usually see. (Taiwan Indigenous Peoples) (National Ethnic Affairs Commission https://www.cip.gov.tw/zh-tw/index.html) 3. Use images of indigenous peoples of your country of residence to introduce the topic.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1. "Indigenous Peoples" representing collective rights and "Indigenous Individuals" representing individual rights: According to Article 2 of Taiwan's Basic Law on Indigenous Peoples, "Indigenous Peoples" refers to the traditional ethnic groups existing in Taiwan and under the jurisdiction of the state, including the Amis, Atayal, Paiwan, Bunun, Puyuma, Rukai, Tsou, Saisiyat, Yami, Thao, Kavalan, Taroko, and other ethnic groups that consider themselves Indigenous and have been approved by the Executive Yuan upon report from the Central Indigenous Peoples' Affairs Authority. This is a concept of collective rights. "Indigenous Individuals," on the other hand, refers to individuals within Indigenous Peoples.

Machine Translated by Google

2. Vocabulary related to indigenous peoples in this lesson includes "indigenous peoples, ethnic groups, tribes, festivals, languages, and customs." The teacher can ask questions like, "Do you know if there are any indigenous peoples in your country (where you live)? / How many ethnic groups are there? / Do they have their own languages and scripts? / Do you know what special cultures and customs they have? / Do they have festivals? / Have you participated in any indigenous activities?" Generally, almost every country has indigenous peoples. Even if students can't name them immediately, they can be asked to look up relevant information online and then answer. The names of Taiwan's indigenous groups are not a teaching focus, and students don't need to be required to name them. "Amis" is used because it is the largest ethnic group. 3. "Ethnic group" refers to a specific ethnic group, with a broader scope, such as Han Chinese or Amis. "Tribe" refers to a place where people live together, now often referring to areas or communities where indigenous peoples are concentrated, such as the Taibalang tribe. Together, they can be said as "the Taibalang tribe of the Amis." Currently, many indigenous peoples in Taiwan have migrated to cities and settled in certain areas, which are then called "tribes," such as the "Sanying Tribe" along the Dahan River and the "Xizhou Tribe" in Xindian, New Taipei City.

4. The word "difference" is used frequently. In the past, it was common to say "What's different?" or "What's different about it?". In a more formal and written way, one can say "What's the difference?". The teacher asked students questions such as "What are the differences between English and Chinese? / What are the differences in food between the eastern and western United States? / What are the differences in marriage customs between Taiwan and the United States?" by using two things or situations, allowing students to express their opinions freely.

5. "Customs" and "habits" are often used together. The "customs" we've learned can be considered a shortened form of "customs and habits," and is commonly used in social and cultural contexts. For example, wedding customs. "Customs" and "habits" are two separate terms that can be used in different contexts. For example, "Her lifestyle habits..." is incorrect; you cannot say "Her lifestyle customs...". However, when used in traditional festivals and cultural activities, "customs" and "customs" are more appropriate.

Multiple replacements are possible.

6. The new word "ÿÿ" (fàngjiÿ) is used in different ways than the previously learned words "ÿÿ" (jiàqÿ), "ÿÿ" (qÿqÿ), and "ÿÿ" (jiàqÿ). Teachers can use different scenarios to practice repeatedly and help students distinguish between these words.

7. "Coast" and "seaside" are different. "Seaside" simply refers to the edge of land connecting to the sea, a sandy beach where one can swim and play in the water, although some beaches are not suitable for swimming or playing in the water. "Coast" often refers to the geographical junction of land and sea; small island nations often have long coastlines. Hualien in eastern Taiwan has many cliffs, making it unsuitable for swimming or playing in the water, hence the saying "Hualien's coast is beautiful."

8. Taiwan is an "island," hence the saying "round-the-island" tourism. Many countries have islands; students can share what they know. For example: "Which island is famous in the world?", "Which island is suitable for vacation?", "Which country has the most islands in the world?" 9. "East" and "eastern" are different. This textbook has already taught "~ÿ," where "ÿ" indicates a part within a country, such as: "New York/Los Angeles is in the eastern/western part of the United States." "ÿ" indicates the border/boundary of a country or city, such as: "Japan is north of Taiwan, Mexico is south of the United States, San Francisco is north of Los Angeles." If it's only part of a city, "ÿ" might be used, such as: "Taipei's eastern district." 10. "Ocean" is a formal term; normally only "ÿ" is used. This lesson has already introduced "Pacific Ocean," so it can be used as needed.

Add "Atlantic Ocean" and "Indian Ocean"—these are both "oceans".

Machine Translated by Google

11. The measure word "ÿ" is used for "one trip back and forth," meaning one trip. It differs from "ÿÿ" (yÿ cì). "ÿÿÿÿ" (qù guò yÿ cì) refers to the number of times, while "ÿ" indicates "going and returning." You can say "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (wÿ shàng yuè chÿ chÿi, qù fÿguó yÿ tàng) but not "ÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿÿ" (*wÿ shàng yuè chÿ chÿi, qù fÿguó yÿ càng). 12. "ÿÿ" (sÿ jiÿn) is currently commonly used in Taiwan to refer to tourist destinations. This lesson includes many Taiwanese city and attraction names. The teacher can use a map of Taiwan (or search for relevant maps online) and mark the tourist attractions that visitors to Taiwan typically visit, then introduce them to the students. The place names and attraction names are not the focus of the teaching; the teacher only needs to ensure students can roughly name them, even using their native language (English). Related website links are available in the supplementary resources section.

III. Grammar Teaching

1. Each V 's

(1) The sentence pattern "each has its own" indicates that there are many different situations under the same theme, such as in example (1): There are many kinds of Taiwanese tea, each with its own flavor. If it means that in the same situation, everyone does things according to their own wishes, use "each V each." The "de" is often followed by the object of "V," which is often omitted. For example, in example (2): When I go out to eat with my friends, we each pay our own way. (The word "de" is omitted.) "money".

(2) In sentences with "each V each", it is not easy to pronounce "V" accurately, so the teacher's prompts must be clear. First, practice in the way shown in the exercise section (providing verbs), and then try to see if students can pronounce it without prompts for verbs.

(3) The teacher uses pictures of two main characters to show their different situations in terms of food, clothing, housing, and transportation, so that they can practice "each doing their own thing". For example: A likes to eat hamburgers, B likes to eat bento boxes, so "they each eat their own thing". A wants to buy sportswear, B wants to buy sneakers, so "they each shop their own way".

(1) When describing an event, in which multiple parallel items are listed, “etc.” is used to indicate that there are other items that cannot be listed.

(2) Teachers can first use 2 to 3 pictures to help students apply the grammar. For example, on a map of Europe, "France, Germany, and the United Kingdom" are marked, and the teacher can ask, "You have been to Europe. Which countries have you visited?" The teacher can also ask other open-ended questions directly in the form of exercises.

3. Not available without V / VP

(1) The sentence pattern "must be done" indicates that the event the speaker is talking about must be completed.

The degree to which it is absolutely necessary is extremely high.

(2) This sentence pattern is highly necessary and expresses thoughts and opinions with great certainty. Teachers can ask students questions and have them answer using this sentence pattern. Teachers can use some interesting scenarios to ask students questions, such as: "Stinky tofu smells a bit bad, would you eat it if you went to Taiwan?", "Which restaurant has the best barbecue? You must try it?", "A colleague is getting married and has invited you to the wedding banquet, would you go?", etc.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The bottom line represents the key learning points of this lesson) 1. Eastern Taiwan is well worth a visit. Not only can you see the culture of indigenous peoples, but you can also admire the beautiful sun. Pacific coast. 2. Are there significant differences in the cultures of different ethnic groups?

3. Different ethnic groups have their own unique characteristics in terms of language, culture, and customs. 4. My choice to travel to the east was the right one.

5. Famous tourist attractions in Taiwan, such as Alishan, Sun Moon Lake, and Kenting, all have different indigenous tribes. 6. Lanyu is located east of Taiwan. 7. The indigenous customs of Lanyu are often related to the ocean. 8. Their music and dance are very unique; I absolutely have to see them!

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into two parts, each with its own independent dialogue, including key vocabulary and grammar points. This is to limit the amount of information students encounter, focusing them on a few sentences in each part initially. The teacher first presents the first part of the dialogue, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This dialogue helps students understand the meaning and practice speaking the sentences. Then, other questions are used to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar.

(3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar in the context of the text. (4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of the lesson, use information questions to extend the discussion topics, and practice using the key sentences of the lesson.

Part One Text

Chen Fangyi: Liya, the Mid-Autumn Festival is coming soon, and we have a three-day holiday. What are your plans? Gao Liya: I'm going to travel to eastern Taiwan because I'm very interested in the culture of Taiwan's indigenous peoples.

Chen Fangyi: Eastern Taiwan is well worth a visit. Not only can you see the culture of the indigenous peoples, but you can also enjoy the beautiful Pacific coastline.

Machine Translated by Google

Gao Liya: I heard that there are many indigenous groups in Taiwan. How many are there in total? Chen Fangyi: There are sixteen indigenous groups in total. They live in various parts of Taiwan.

Goria: Are there significant differences in the cultures of different ethnic groups?

Chen Fangyi: Different ethnic groups have their own unique characteristics in terms of language, culture, and customs. The largest ethnic group is the Amis, most of whom live in Hualien and Taitung.

Goria: So my choice to travel to the East was the right one.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is: asking others about their holiday plans and giving a general introduction to the current situation of Taiwan's indigenous peoples. (2) The teacher asks: "How do you arrange your holidays during long holidays?" It is important to note that "holiday" is a separable verb, and other quantifiers or modifiers should be inserted in the middle. For example: "Three days off..." "Take a long holiday, take a spring break." Although "take a three-day holiday" is understandable, it is not the standard usage of a separable verb. (3) The teacher used the sentence pattern "Where do you think/feel is worth visiting?" to let the students practice saying "I think/feel XX is worth visiting." This will help them express themselves better in the future.

(4) Practice describing the characteristics of Taiwan's indigenous peoples using the sentence structure "Different..., each with its own...." Then, the teacher can find other topics for practice, such as: "Do different teas taste the same?", "America has many ethnic groups; are there differences in their dietary habits? What are the differences?", and "Where you live, why are there so many different types of houses? What are the differences between them?"

(5) Practice the expression "My choice was correct." The teacher can provide scenarios for students to answer using the sentence pattern, such as: "There are many languages, but you chose to learn Chinese. Do you think your choice was correct?" or "You changed companies. Do you think your current company is better than your previous one?"

Part Two Texts

Gao Liya: Where should I go next? Chen Fangyi: I suggest you go to the "Taiwan Indigenous Peoples Cultural Park" in Pingtung. There you can see the traditions of the indigenous peoples. The exhibition showcases traditional culture and lifestyles, and also includes handicraft teaching activities.

Gao Liya: That's great! I can learn some indigenous handicrafts while I'm there; it'll definitely be very rewarding. Chen Fangyi: You could also plan a round-the-island trip. Famous tourist spots in Taiwan, like Alishan, Sun Moon Lake, and Kenting, all have different indigenous tribes and various festivals.

Gao Liya: I saw a video of a festival of an indigenous people on a small island. Their festival was related to fish. Chen Fangyi: That's Lanyu, on the east side of Taiwan. The indigenous customs there are often related to the ocean. The boat is also very beautiful.

Chen Fangyi: Yes! You can learn from her too.

(1) This section focuses on discussing tourist attractions worth visiting and asking for suggestions from others. (2) The teacher asks the students, "If someone asks you where to travel, what would you say?" Students can use the sentence pattern "I suggest you go to..., where there is not only..., but also..." to practice speaking a longer sentence. Different attractions can also be introduced, and students can talk about why each attraction is worth visiting.

Machine Translated by Google

(3) Taiwan is an island. The teacher can show a map of Taiwan to explain what a "round-the-island trip" is. The teacher can also use the round-the-island trip poster in the classroom activity area to point out where the places on the poster are and why it can be called a "round-the-island trip".

(4) Use the video link provided by the resource supplement to introduce Orchid Island. Watching the video will make it easier to understand the culture of the Yami (Tao) people.

(5) The teacher finds pictures or videos of indigenous clothing, weaving, and handicrafts to illustrate the indigenous culture. Cultural characteristics. See the information on the Council of Indigenous Peoples of Taiwan for reference.

(6) Have students explain the differences between the local indigenous culture and that of the Taiwanese indigenous people.

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example Questions: (Teaching questions, based on textbook content, to check students' understanding) (1) Where does Gao Liya plan to travel during the Mid-Autumn Festival? Why did she choose that place? (2) Why did Chen Fangyi say that eastern Taiwan is worth visiting? (3) How many indigenous groups are there in Taiwan, according to Chen Fangyi? (4) Are the cultures of Taiwan's indigenous peoples the same? In what ways are they different? (5) Which is the largest indigenous group in Taiwan? (6) Why does Gao Liya feel that her choice was right? (7) Where does Chen Fangyi suggest Gao Liya travel next? (8) What can Gao Liya see at the "Taiwan Indigenous Peoples Cultural Park"? What can she learn? (9) Why did Chen Fangyi suggest that Gao Liya arrange a round-the-island trip? (10) Which island did Gao Liya watch a video about? (11) What are the characteristics of the indigenous culture of Lanyu? (12) Does Gao Liya want to go to Lanyu? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (13) Which characteristic of Taiwan's indigenous peoples do you like? (14) How many indigenous groups are there in your country? Approximately how many people are there? (15) Does your country's indigenous peoples have a long history? (16) Do they have their own language and script? What about their music and dance? (17) Which characteristic of your country's indigenous peoples do you find most interesting?

(18) Is the culture of the indigenous peoples in your country valued?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, and then have them read the text aloud individually in turn, while correcting their pronunciation.

7. Have students complete narration exercises based on the text, aiming to enable them to retell the key points of the text in a storytelling style. In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in dialogues without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...
Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method:

a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups. b. The teacher calls on students to take turns reading the dialogue aloud.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students can memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after reciting them, understand the content of the dialogue, and write out the missing parts using Chinese characters or pinyin.

(2) Method:

a. Have students fill in the dialogue. b. The teacher calls on students to read aloud or write down the answers.

c. Write Chinese characters or pinyin, depending on the student's level.

d. If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of Chinese characters to be practiced in the text.

e. Teachers can reinforce the Chinese characters that students have not yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in this lesson), by filling in the blanks in these Chinese characters and words, and having them read or write them again.

3. Please read the article and then answer the following questions: (1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar learned in this lesson to improve comprehension and reading skills. (2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more conducive to identifying characters and understanding sentence meaning in a shorter time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check whether they understand the short passage they have read.

c. Teachers can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or they can ask inference questions not mentioned in the passage.
Questions, such as: Did Gao Liya eat indigenous food? How did she feel about it?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage. e.
Extend the discussion based on the content.

4. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity format and remind students of the sentences to be used. b. Have students ask each other questions, completing the table as they do so.

Machine Translated by Google

c. The teacher asked the students to report to the class what the students he had interviewed had said.

d. The teacher can also select two students to have a conversation in front of the whole class.

5. Oral report

(1) Objective: To enable students to introduce the indigenous peoples of their country.

(2) Method:

a. Please find information and report on the situation of the indigenous peoples of your country, using the vocabulary you have learned.

b. If there are many ethnic groups, you can choose only the one that you feel is the most unique to report.

6. Reading authentic materials

(1) Objective: To train students to read real-life materials.

(2) Method:

a. Ask students to look at the pictures in the textbook.

b. Then look at the questions and let students find the answers themselves from the pictures. c. The teacher can guide students not to pay attention to words they haven't learned yet, but to guess/find the answers using clues from

need to find the relevant words to answer the question. For example: seeing "location" is enough to answer question (1). Seeing "handicraft" is enough to answer question (2). Seeing "noon time + snacks" is enough to answer question (3). e. After reading, the teacher asks students to take turns giving their answers. If there are any incorrect answers, the teacher will give them a reading.

Strategy guidance.

VI. Supplementary Teaching Materials :

Teachers may use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. Teachers can read the dialogues aloud to train students' listening skills, or they can create handouts to train reading comprehension.

After arriving in Taiwan, Gao Liya saw a television program about an indigenous festival on a small island called Lanyu. The island was originally inhabited by the Yami people, and now also by some Han Chinese who migrated from Taiwan. Lanyu is the only indigenous group in Taiwan living on the island. Lanyu boasts beautiful coastal scenery and unique boats, but what attracted Gao Liya most was the festival. The Yami festival is called the "Flying Fish Festival." During the festival, the indigenous people sing and dance, hoping that the residents will catch more fish and have a richer life. The festival also expresses gratitude to the fish in the ocean. The festival was very lively, and everyone seemed very happy.

After watching the video, Gao Liya started planning her vacation. She planned to visit Orchid Island during the long holiday next month. To get to Orchid Island, she needed to take a boat or plane from Taitung, so she had to book tickets and hotels in advance. Chen Fangyi, knowing Gao Liya was going to Orchid Island, wanted to go with her, as she had never been before. Gao Liya was very happy to have someone accompany her; if she couldn't understand the local language, Chen Fangyi would be there. Gao Liya researched and found that riding a motorbike was the most convenient way to explore Orchid Island. Luckily, Chen Fangyi knew how to ride a motorbike, so their transportation problem was solved. With everything arranged, Gao Liya hoped her vacation would arrive quickly next month so she could fully appreciate the scenery of Orchid Island and learn about the Yami culture.

Questions: (Please answer with (•/×) or (T / F)) 1. Gao Liya learned about (Lanyu from watching TV. 2. The people who originally lived on (Lanyu were all indigenous people. 3. The festivals on Lanyu (are very lively, with people singing and dancing. 4. Chen Fangyi invited Gao Liya to go to Lanyu together. 5. Because they were all afraid

Lesson 10

My Taiwan Experience

I. Learning Objectives

Topic: Living Experiences Abroad

After completing this lesson, you will be able to: 1. Describe your life abroad. 2. Explain a memorable experience from your life abroad. 3. Describe your feelings.

II . Teaching Focus and Teaching Activity Design

I. Warm-up Activities 1.

Prepare several pictures from this textbook (large pictures from each lesson), and then review the things Gao Liya did and experienced in Taiwan in this textbook. Train students to describe these events, and the teacher should use appropriate conjunctions to help students describe Gao Liya's various experiences in longer sentences.

2. The teacher then uses students' experiences of traveling, going on business trips, or temporarily residing in a certain place to ask students to share their experiences.

II. Vocabulary Teaching 1.

The new word "ÿÿÿ" (yÿ zhuÿn yÿn) is often used together to express that time passes quickly. The word itself is "ÿÿ," but in spoken language it's often presented as "ÿÿÿ……" (yÿ zhuÿn yÿn…). Using only "ÿÿ" sounds more formal, such as "ÿÿÿ……" (zhuÿn yÿn jiÿn…). Therefore, the teacher will practice using the entire word. The teacher asks, "This semester is almost over, do you think time has passed quickly?" Students practice answering in different situations using the phrase "Time passes so quickly, in the blink of an eye this semester is over."

2. The new words "feeling" and "enthusiasm" are used together. "Feeling" means "to feel," but its usage is less broad and its intensity is deeper than "feeling." "Feeling" is often used with abstract psychological feelings. For example:

Machine Translated by Google

"Feeling warmth, feeling the hospitality of Taiwanese people, feeling the friendliness of colleagues, feeling warmth, feeling the pain of losing loved ones." Because the collocation of "feeling" is limited, the teacher can only practice with "feeling the warmth of people." 3. "Internationalization, modernization" The teacher can practice with the whole meaning of the words, without extending too much or explaining the meaning of "modernization." Use "internationalization, modernization" to describe a city, such as: "Taipei is an international/modern city." The teacher can practice with "Which cities in the world are considered modern/international cities?" 4. Practice the new word "profound" with the previously learned words "impression, leave behind." For example: "This trip left him with..."

"It left a deep impression on me," and "Taiwanese wedding customs are very unique and left a deep impression on me."

5. "Memories" are often paired with "beautiful" and "unforgettable." The teacher practiced using phrases like "~~leaving behind beautiful memories, childhood memories~~". "Memories" can be used as a verb, such as "I recall my childhood…", but it doesn't have a noun form. Since the words are used frequently, this lesson will focus on practicing the usage of nouns.

6. The meaning of "utilize" is quite diverse. In this lesson, it means "utilize time," which means "to arrange and manage time well, and not to waste time," such as "using the time spent commuting to read a book" or "using the weekend to clean the house." It can also be used with "utilize + object" or "utilize + opportunity," such as "using the map on my phone to find my way" or "taking advantage of a business trip." There is also "utilize + person," but this usage often has a negative connotation, and teachers can decide whether to teach this usage based on the context.

7. "ÿ" means "to try" or "to give it a shot," and is more formal and written. Their usage differs slightly. "ÿ" is often followed by an object, such as in "She likes to try things she hasn't done before." "ÿ" can have its object placed before the verb or omitted, such as in "I've never done this before, I want to try it."

8. "ÿÿ" (dénán) is mostly used to describe positive aspects. For example, "ÿÿÿÿ/ÿÿÿÿÿ" (dénán jÿhuì - a rare opportunity/opportunity is hard to come by), "ÿÿÿÿ" (dénán jÿngyàn - rare experience), "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (dénán hÿo tiÿnqì - rare good weather), "ÿÿÿÿÿ" (dénán de rénrén - rare talent), etc. 9. The new word "ÿÿ" (yuánlái) is often used as an adverb. However, in this lesson, "ÿÿ" appears as an adjective (Adj). Therefore, this lesson provides two parts of speech markings. However, this textbook originally did not have an adjective (Adj) part of speech classification. According to Professor Deng Shouxin's classification, "ÿÿ" belongs to "definite stative verbs," meaning "can only be used as an attributive," that is, "in the adjective position, it cannot be used alone as a verb (predicate) like a regular stative verb." For example, it cannot be used as "ÿ ~~ÿÿÿ" (hÿn yuánlái). This textbook marks new words based on their part of speech used in the lesson. Marking them as adverbs might confuse students, so two parts of speech are marked. Teachers can explain that in this lesson, "ÿÿ" is used as an adjective, and if used as an adverb, its usage is similar to "ÿÿ" (bÿnbÿn).

10. The word "ÿ" in this lesson has a different meaning than the previously learned "ÿÿÿ" (installing the internet), therefore it is listed as a new vocabulary word again. The teacher can... This is used to illustrate the phenomenon of "one character/word having multiple meanings" in Chinese.

11. The use of the word "ÿ" (pàng) differs from its English counterpart. Teachers should pay attention to errors students make when directly translating from their native language. For example, instead of saying, "This matter, I'm afraid no one can solve," a student might say, "*This matter, I'm afraid no one can solve," which is a direct translation of "I am afraid...". When using "ÿ," the subject "I" is usually omitted, or it is placed after "ÿ." For example, "The weather is bad, I'm afraid I can't take the boat to Lanyu."

Machine Translated by Google

12. The new word "ÿÿ" (dào dì) means something that is very similar to the original, and it is often used in the context of food and daily life. For example, "This xiaolongbao tastes very authentic," or "Her English is very authentic." This word is the opposite of the mainland Chinese expression "ÿÿ" (dì dào). If students have heard or learned "ÿÿ," the teacher can explain that the two sides of the Taiwan Strait have different expressions but the meaning is the same.

13. "Back then" is a time word, often used as a beginning when narrating or explaining a past event. For example: "Back then I didn't want to go..., but...", "He was very handsome when he was young, and many girls liked him back then," etc.

14. In this lesson, "accident" has no negative connotation; it simply means "unexpected, contrary to expectations." Therefore, it's easiest to practice with "gain," meaning "unexpectedly good gains," or "an unexpected opportunity," etc. As for the "accident" like "a car accident," it's not the meaning of this lesson, and teachers don't need to extend it.

15. "For example" is a commonly used phrase. Teachers often use this phrase in class to give examples, and students will naturally understand it. When training students to give examples, using "for example" can make the examples they are talking about clear to others.

III. Grammar Teaching 1. To bring about (1) The subject/topic of this sentence pattern is introduced by the preposition "to". (2) The teacher gives a scenario with different aspects of the theme and a cause-and-effect relationship or benefit-and-loss relationship before and after for students to practice. For example: "Exercise is related to people's health", "Being able to speak many languages is good for the future", "Bad weather affects our lives". Let students use the sentence pattern to enter the scenario. For example: "Exercise brings health to people's bodies", "Being able to speak many languages brings benefits to our future", "Bad weather brings trouble to our lives". Let students practice according to the various scenarios in the exercise.

2. V+ÿÿÿ+Complementÿ (1) The complement “ÿ” is used to indicate whether there is enough space to accommodate something. This grammatical structure Only the forms "V + get + down" or "V + not + down" are available.

(2) The examples given by the teacher should be related to "space", such as: room size, classroom size, space in a car/airplane/train, capacity of a schoolbag/suitcase, stomach capacity, etc., and then ask the students to answer the questions. This grammar is easy to understand, as long as the students can express it according to the structure.

3. Generally speaking

(1) This phrase is used to indicate that what is mentioned is a general situation. It is often placed at the beginning of a sentence.

(2) Using this phrase can make the speaker seem more objective and express opinions from a holistic perspective. Therefore, teachers can ask students about various discussion-oriented and general phenomena and have them answer the questions with "Generally speaking, ...". For example, various questions in the practice section.

IV. Text Teaching

• Key sentences

(The following points are the key learning points of this lesson) 1. In the blink of an eye, I've lived in Taipei for almost a year. 2. Before coming to Taiwan, I was a little worried that I wouldn't be able to adapt to the Asian environment, but everything went very smoothly.

3. The reason I had no problems living there is because Taipei is very modern.

4. My most vivid impression of Taipei is its clean and inexpensive MRT system.

5. Besides work, I always use weekends or holidays to try different things. 6. I've gained many first-time experiences in life. For example, going to a night market and eating stinky tofu. 7. My original suitcase definitely won't be able to hold it all; I'll probably have to buy another one. 8. Generally speaking, I have opportunities to speak Chinese with others, so my Chinese has improved very quickly.

9. This was something I hadn't expected; it was an unexpected bonus.

• Suggested Process

1. The teacher plays the textbook recording to help students grasp the main idea. The teacher can listen to a short paragraph or a few sentences, then pause and ask students what they heard, thus training their listening skills and assessing their comprehension. If students' listening comprehension is poor, this is the first time, so don't be too strict; whatever they understand is acceptable.

2. The teacher leads the class in reading the text aloud, and the students repeat it together. A PowerPoint presentation and vocabulary cards can be prepared to help students understand the main idea of the lesson. 3. Divide the text into three parts, each with independent meaning and including important vocabulary and grammar. This is to avoid overwhelming students with too much information at once, allowing them to focus on a few sentences in each part. The teacher presents the first part first, introducing grammar and vocabulary. This helps students understand the meaning and practice reciting the sentences in this part. Then, other questions are used to encourage repeated practice of these key sentences.

4. Teaching process for each part of the text:

(1) Display sentences from the text, highlighting key vocabulary and grammar points. (2) Briefly explain the points to note regarding vocabulary and grammar.

(3) Have students practice vocabulary and grammar in the context of the text. (4) Use teaching questions to check whether students fully understand the text and can summarize its main idea. (5) Integrate the content of the lesson, use information questions to extend the discussion topics, and practice using the key sentences of the lesson.

Part One Text

Time flies! I've been living in Taipei for almost a year now. In this year, I've not only experienced the friendliness and warmth of the Taiwanese people, but I've also gained a lot.

Before coming to Taiwan, I was a little worried that I wouldn't be able to adapt to the Asian environment, but everything went very smoothly. The reason I had no problems with daily life was that Taipei is very modern and international. There are 24-hour convenience stores, night markets selling all kinds of snacks and daily necessities, and restaurants offering international cuisine, making it easy for me to eat and shop. In addition, what impressed me most about Taipei was the clean and inexpensive MRT (subway system), which made it very convenient to get around.

(1) The teaching focus of this section is first to train students on how to express how quickly time passes, and second to teach students how to write.

The article begins with a concise and informative summary in the first paragraph.

(2) The teacher uses the sentence pattern "Time flies so fast, in the blink of an eye... During this time, not only..., but also..." to have students repeatedly practice the benefits brought by different times and events, such as the feeling after changing jobs. Students are asked to say: "Time flies so fast, in the blink of an eye I've been at this company for half a year. During this time/the past six months, I've not only met many good colleagues, but I've also enjoyed my work very much."

(3) The teacher uses the sentence pattern "...in the past, I was worried about.../afraid of..., but I didn't expect..." to practice. The teacher gives prompts such as: before and after a business trip, before and after changing jobs, before and after moving, before and after getting married, etc. to practice speaking longer sentences.

(4) The teacher uses the sentence pattern: "...the reason why there is no problem is..." to practice. The teacher gives prompts such as: changing jobs, traveling with friends, renting an apartment with friends, going on a business trip abroad, married life, being able to ride a motorcycle safely, etc., and the reasons why there is no problem. Students are asked to answer these questions using the sentence pattern.

(5) The teacher uses the sentence pattern "What impressed me most about... is..." to practice. The teacher gives prompts such as: which city you traveled to, which country's cultural characteristics you saw, the work situation of your colleagues in the company you saw, the process of a certain ceremony you witnessed, etc. Ask students to use the sentence pattern to describe the part that impressed them the most.

Part Two Texts

Besides work, I always use weekends and holidays to try different things, gaining many first-time experiences. For example, I went to a night market and ate stinky tofu; I sang Chinese songs at a karaoke bar; I visited an indigenous tribe and learned dance and handicrafts; I attended a wedding and even gave a red envelope. These invaluable experiences have brought me many wonderful memories. While traveling, I bought a lot of souvenirs to bring back as gifts for my friends. Of course, I also want to bring back authentic Taiwanese tea and pineapple cakes for He Xi to try. With so much stuff to bring back, my original suitcase definitely won't be enough; I'll probably have to buy another one.

(1) This section focuses on describing a person's experience. It uses parallel sentences, employing several concluding phrases...

Using similar sentences to describe things makes them clear and easy to understand.

(2) The teacher asks, "Which first experience impressed you the most?" and lets the students express themselves freely with "For me, the first time... impressed me the most."

(3) The teacher asked, "What rare experience brought you many wonderful memories?" and the students answered, "~~ brought me many wonderful memories."

Machine Translated by Google

(4) The teacher asked students to express their opinions freely by asking questions such as "When you travel, do you like to buy souvenirs? / What kind of souvenirs do you like to buy? Why? / Do you ever buy so many souvenirs that you can't even fit them all in your suitcase?"

(5) This passage uses "or" to indicate "or". In written text, "is" can be omitted. (6) Spoken language often uses "when traveling", but in this lesson, only "when traveling" is used, indicating that in written language, "when" is often omitted as "when". The teacher can provide a brief explanation to facilitate understanding when reading the text later.

Part Three Texts

When I first started learning Chinese, I heard a saying: "To learn a language well, it's best to live in that language environment for a period of time." After coming to Taiwan, I found this to be very true. Generally speaking, I hear Chinese every day and have opportunities to speak Chinese with others, so my Chinese, whether listening or speaking, has improved very quickly. This was something I didn't expect at the time; it's an unexpected gain.

(1) The main point of this section is the principle that "language learning is related to the environment". After all, this set of books is a language teaching material, and the purpose is to bring the concepts and ideas related to language learning into this lesson. The teacher asks the students: "Do you think the statement in the book, 'If you want to learn a language well, it is best to live in that language environment for a period of time,' makes sense?" Let the students express their opinions based on their experiences of learning various languages.

(2) Generally speaking, adult students have experience learning a foreign language. Ask students if they have ever considered living in that language environment for a period of time. If students have actually lived in the country where they are learning the foreign language for a period of time, ask them to talk about their experience.

(3) Ask students to give examples of whether they have ever gained unexpected benefits from doing something, and what those benefits brought them. What are the benefits?

5. After reading the entire text aloud again, ask questions based on the text.

ÿ Example of a question: (Teaching questions, based on the textbook content, to check whether students understand)

(1) What did Gao Liya feel during her year in Taiwan? (2) Was Gao Liya worried before coming to Taiwan? What about after she arrived? (3) Why did Gao Liya have no problems with her life? (4) What impressed Gao Liya the most about Taipei? (5) Besides work, what else does Gao Liya usually do? (6) What first experiences did Gao Liya have in Taiwan? (7) What souvenirs does Gao Liya plan to bring back? (8) Why does Gao Liya want to buy another suitcase? (9) Which statement related to learning a language does Gao Liya find very reasonable? (10) What unexpected benefits did Gao Liya gain from living in Taiwan? ÿ Please answer the following questions based on your own situation: (Information questions, allowing students to freely express their experiences and opinions) (11) Please talk about your experience living abroad? (12) What is the most memorable thing about living abroad? (13) Which country or city impressed you the most?

Machine Translated by Google

(14) What was the first thing that impressed you the most? (15) What is your favorite souvenir when you travel? Why don't you like buying souvenirs? (16) Would you learn a foreign language and then go to that country to live for a period of time? (17) Do you think that living in that country for a period of time will make your foreign language improve quickly?

(18) What experiences have you had that you didn't expect at the time but later gained unexpected benefits from?

6. Have students practice reading the text aloud in groups, then have them read it aloud individually in turns, correcting their pronunciation. 7. Have students practice retelling the text, aiming to enable them to summarize the key points of the text as a story.

In addition to dialogue, monologue-style narration can also be developed.

V. Comprehensive Activities

1. Reading aloud and recognizing the text

(1) Objective: Students will be able to recognize Chinese characters and sentences in the text without the aid of phonetic symbols or pinyin, and correctly...

Pronounce it correctly.

(2) Method: a. Have students practice the dialogue in groups.

b. The teacher selects students to take turns reading the text aloud.

2. Fill in the blanks and write the text.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to memorize the sentences learned in this lesson after recitation, understand the content of the dialogue, and use Chinese characters or spelling.

Write out the missing parts using phonetic transcription.

(2) Method: a. Have

b. The teacher calls on a student and reads out or writes down the answer.

c. Writing Chinese characters or pinyin can be arranged according to students' levels. d.

If students learn quickly, the teacher can provide additional worksheets to increase the number of characters to be written in the text. e. The teacher can reinforce characters that students haven't yet memorized (regardless of whether they are new words in the lesson), by filling in the blanks in these characters or phrases and having them read or write them again.

3. Please read this article and then answer the questions below.

(1) Objective: To consolidate and apply the vocabulary and grammar of this lesson in order to improve comprehension and reading skills.

(2) Method:

a. Ask students to read the short passage aloud or silently. Students with weak character recognition skills can read aloud; otherwise, silent reading is more conducive to identifying characters and understanding sentence meaning in a shorter time.

b. Ask students to answer questions from the textbook to check whether they understand the short passage they have read.

Machine Translated by Google

c. The teacher can ask more detailed questions about the passage, or inference questions not mentioned in the passage. For example: Can Gao Liya speak English in Taiwan? From what aspects did Gao Liya experience the friendliness and enthusiasm of the Taiwanese people?

d. Have students retell the content of the short passage.

e. Further discussion based on the content.

4. I heard about the interactive activities.

(1) Objective: Students will be able to use the sentences and vocabulary learned in this lesson fluently. (2) Method:

a. Explain the activity method and remind students of the sentences to be used. b. Have students ask each other questions while completing the table.

c. The teacher asked the students to report to the class what the students he had interviewed had said.

d. The teacher can also select two students to have a conversation in front of the whole class.

5. Oral report

(1) Objective: To enable students to report their own experiences. (2) Method: Please report on a country or city you have visited, including its characteristics, the most impressive things that happened to you, and the most unforgettable experiences.

6. Reading Real-Life Materials (1)

Objective: To train students to read real-life materials. (2) Method: a. Ask students to look at the pictures in the textbook. b. Then look at the questions and let students find the answers from the pictures themselves. c. The teacher can guide students not to pay attention to words they have not yet learned, but to guess/find the answers using clues from words they have learned. d. Students only need to find the relevant words to answer the questions. For example:

seeing "train, 5 days" can answer questions (1)(2). Seeing "Paiwan tribe, indigenous people's park" can answer questions (3). Seeing "cross-sea bridge, coastline" can answer questions (4).

e. After reading, the teacher asks students to take turns giving their answers. If any answer is incorrect, the teacher will correct it.

Strategy guidance.

VI. Supplementary Teaching of the Text This lesson's text is in the form of a short passage. This supplementary teaching will be presented in the form of a dialogue to strengthen oral practice. The dialogue content is the same as the text, and its purpose is for students to practice question-and-answer format. Two students can take turns asking and answering questions. The teacher may also use the following materials as supplementary reading or listening exercises, depending on the situation. The teacher can read the dialogue aloud to train students' listening skills, or create handouts for further reading practice.

Li Guocheng: How long have you been in Taiwan?

Gao Liya: Time flies! It's almost been a year since I came. Li Guocheng: What have you experienced in Taiwan? Gao Liya: I've not only felt the friendliness and warmth of the Taiwanese people, but I've also gained a lot.

Li Guocheng: Were you worried when you came to Taiwan?

Gao Liya: I was a little worried at first, afraid that I wouldn't be able to adapt to the Asian environment, but everything went very smoothly.

Li Guocheng: What was the reason you had no problems with your life later on? Gao Liya: The reason I had no problems with my life was that Taipei is very modern and international. Li Guocheng: Are there any other reasons? Gao Liya: There are 24-hour convenience stores, night markets selling all kinds of snacks and daily necessities, and restaurants selling food from all over the world, making it very easy for me to eat and buy things. So, I had absolutely no problems with my life.

Li Guocheng: What aspect of Taipei impressed you the most?

Gao Liya: What impressed me most about Taipei was the clean and inexpensive MRT (subway system), which made it easy to get around. convenient.

Li Guocheng: I heard that you had many first-time experiences in Taiwan. What were they? Gao Liya: Many. For example, I went to a night market and ate stinky tofu; I went to a karaoke bar and sang Chinese songs; I went to see the culture of indigenous tribes and learned dance and handicrafts; I attended a wedding and even gave a red envelope.

Li Guocheng: Are you planning to buy souvenirs to take back as gifts for your friends? Gao Liya: I bought a lot of souvenirs to take back as gifts for my friends. I also want to bring back some authentic Taiwanese tea and... Let He Xi try the pineapple cakes when we get back. Li Guocheng: I don't think your suitcase can hold all this, right?

Goria: Yes! I'm afraid we'll have to buy another one.

Li Guocheng: What was your biggest gain from this trip to Taiwan? Gao Liya: Generally speaking, my Chinese, whether listening or speaking, has improved very quickly. This is my biggest gain, and it was an unexpected benefit that I didn't expect.

Taiwanese wedding customs

For Chinese people in traditional society, marriage is not only for procreation but also a connection between two families and their social relationships. Therefore, the related customs are very elaborate, generally requiring the completion of "six rites"; furthermore, the times...

Regional differences have made traditional wedding customs more complex. With social changes, increased female autonomy, and the influence of Westernization, modern Taiwanese wedding customs have undergone many changes, including simplification and innovation. We will give a brief introduction using some of the more common customs as examples.

Machine Translated by Google

I. Dowry and Betrothal Gifts

The main items in these two projects are valuables, including cash and jewelry; some families also give houses, cars, and other valuables.

The betrothal gift, etc., is given by the groom to the bride when the couple proposes marriage. The dowry is given to the bride after she receives the betrothal gift.

The gifts are given by the woman to the man. The items exchanged by both parties may differ in content, but their value is generally equal. The main purpose is to express the sincerity of both sides in arranging the marriage and to confirm their relationship.

II. Wedding Procession

On the wedding day, the groom arranges a motorcade (usually two to six cars, each decorated with flowers or ribbons) to pick up the bride from her home, accompanied by his groomsmen.

After the bride and groom bid farewell to the bride's parents,

Get in the car and head to the chapel. The location of the chapel is usually related to where the wedding banquet is held; it could be in a restaurant or a wedding hall.

Fang's home.

III. Ceremony and Wedding Banquet

While wedding ceremonies have become quite Westernized in form, they remain fundamentally traditional. For example, the witnesses are usually the parents and elders of both sides, rather than God or clergy. In the past, weddings were primarily led by the groom's parents, but now they are more often arranged by the couple. Therefore, the wedding often features photos and videos of the couple's life together; and sometimes even includes games and activities that young people enjoy. Unlike the Westernized ceremony, the wedding banquet is more traditionally Chinese, including toasts, a round table meal, and dishes (each with a name related to a happy marriage). After the banquet, the newlyweds and their parents stand together at the entrance of the banquet hall to "see off" the guests. At this time, the bride holds a plate of candy, and guests take a few.

They would say a few words of blessing, and some would take a photo with the newlyweds before leaving.

IV. Red Double Happiness Characters and Wedding Photos

The "red double happiness" character is arguably the most traditional and widespread wedding custom. Regardless of wealth or poverty, people display numerous red double happiness characters in their homes or wedding halls to symbolize good fortune and celebration. "Wedding photos" are a unique feature developed in Taiwan. In the past, couples only took a few simple wedding photos on their wedding day. Starting in the 1980s, couples began taking a series of photos before the wedding ceremony, using outdoor and indoor shots, and even role-playing (wearing different ethnic and historical costumes). These "wedding photos" are quite expensive, but couples enjoy them to create beautiful memories, leading to the development of a wedding industry that has gradually spread to Chinese communities worldwide. Many overseas couples even travel to Taiwan specifically for their "wedding photos," combining the shoot with sightseeing.

When brides exchange their traditional bright red wedding gowns for Western-style white dresses, they also break free from traditional societal expectations of women.
